The proportion of qualified staff in residential and day care services has always been very low and is showing only gradual signs of improvement. About 12% of heads of residential homes are qualified and only 65% of residential advisers have a relevant qualification. The development of a new form of training – the Certificate in Social Service – is beginning to make an impact on this problem; however, the lack of finance and uncertainties as to whether the qualification will be recognized for purposes of salary gradings, makes authorities and staff reluctant to pursue this form of training with more vigour.

There are close working arrangements between local authorities and voluntary organizations concerning a very wide spectrum of social care, from street warden schemes at neighbourhood level to large national organizations providing specialist professional services. Not unnaturally voluntary organizations complain at the parsimony of the grants they receive from local authorities but Social Services departments have a wide range of responsibilities and at a time of limited growth every £ allocated to voluntary organizations is a £ less for the development of statutory services. In many authorities budgets for furniture, equipment, fire precautions, repairs, maintenance and decorations have been cut and cut again in successive years. Expenditure under these headings must in many cases now take precedence over new schemes.

The Elderly

The care of the elderly presents a major challenge to health and social services authorities. The population aged 75 and over will increase by one third by 1995 while those over 85 will rise by a half. It is in these higher age groups that there is a marked loss of mobility; it is also known that housing amenities and income levels decline with each successive age group. Thus as social needs increase the capacity of the elderly to cope unaided is reduced. Moreover, about 30% of the elderly who live in their own homes live alone and this figure rises to 50% for the over 85's.

The incidence of senile dementia is very high among the older age groups. One characteristic of senile dementia is that the patient requires 24 hour surveillance. He cannot be trusted to guard himself against common physical dangers, hypothermia or neglect. He may wander, suffer falls, burn himself or leave gas taps open yet large numbers of patients suffering from senile dementia live alone – one survey in Newcastle found that over half the old ladies with dementia lived entirely alone.

In the face of this rising problem health and social services authorities are required to ensure that their slender resources are used to best advantage and that services are developed to help those in greatest need. Capital programmes have been severely reduced in recent years: there is little hope of any significant rise in the number of hospital beds or places in old people's homes in the next few years. As a consequence domiciliary services must expand to meet the demand.

The vast majority of the elderly live at home and manage their lives with very little contact from the health or personal social services. Only about 2% of the elderly are in hospital at any one time and a similar proportion in residential care. Elderly patients now occupying hospital beds take up about 50% of the total of National Health Service beds. It can be seen therefore that more and more old people in need will be compelled to remain in the community with such assistance as can be provided from community nursing and social services. If only a further 0.1% of the elderly population were to be admitted to hospital, services would be completely overwhelmed with serious implications for other categories of patient requiring care.

Since 1970 there has been a growing reluctance on the part of psychiatric and general hospitals to admit patients suffering from senile dementia. Moreover, Government targets for geriatric services are not being reached; in many parts of the country, staff ratios are too low, consultant geriatricians have a low status in the medical profession and there is a lack of training for junior doctors which adversely affects recruitment to geriatric services.

Undoubtedly hospital services for the chronic sick are not attractive to health service staff. One reason for this is that in the early 1970's there were a number of public scandals about conditions in long-stay hospitals; this may have prompted a determination to reduce admissions as well as making it difficult to recruit staff. Ironically there is a danger that with increasing numbers of frail and elderly confused patients living alone in their own homes the decline in public scandals concerning long-stay hospitals will be replaced by scandals arising from patients dying in their own homes during the next decade.

For the confused elderly person who needs 24-hour surveillance, domiciliary services can only be second best to residential care. General practitioners, home nurses, social workers, home helps and meals on wheels cannot provide the degree of supervision which is desirable for the patient living alone, although the provision of day centres can be a valuable amenity. Night sitter services and the weekend provision of both meals and home helps are developing slowly and in most areas volunteers are used extensively, sometimes as part of schemes involving modest payments. Consideration is being given in some Social Services departments to the training and deployment of new grades of staff to visit and assess the needs of the elderly. Also more beds are being made available in old people's homes for temporary care so that hard pressed relatives can have a holiday or otherwise be relieved from the burden of caring for a limited period.

The pressure on existing facilities together with the availability of joint financing has had the effect of opening up a more effective dialogue between staff employed by health and social services authorities. Joint methods of working are being explored including joint arrangements for assessing the needs of the elderly so that the most appropriate form of care and treatment can be devised within the limitations of local facilities. As one Director was heard to remark "A genuine partnership between the Social Services department and the Area Health Authority is worth an extra 100 beds."

Children

By contrast the number of children in the total population is declining. This gives some hope that it may be possible to divert financial resources from education to the personal social services but because of increasing demands on social services for children it is difficult to foresee a situation in which expenditure on these services can be reduced in favour of the elderly.

A heightened awareness of the needs of young children who are neglected or ill treated by their parents has led to a reappraisal of the role of day nurseries. Prior to 1971 they were primarily concerned with physical health and development. Their integration into Social Services departments has led to them being used more effectively as alternatives to residential care and as a means of providing emotional and social stimulus to deprived and handicapped children. Such developments have significantly altered the role of nurseries and the functions of the staff concerned who must forge links with parents and with other helping professions, attend case conferences and even provide evidence in Court.

There is a steady year by year increase in the number of local authority day nurseries but the number of children who can be placed with registered child minders has risen faster than all other forms of day care provision; indeed, registered child minders are now able to offer 20% more full time places than private, voluntary and local authority day nurseries combined.

Local authorities have been experimenting with schemes for placing children with selected minders. In this way the range of choice open to parents is widened without expensive capital outlay by local authorities. Also, by providing training for daily minders, loaning toys and other equipment, standards of care are improved. Daily minders represent a rich potential for development in future and there is no doubt that for some children a minder can offer more appropriate care than that provided in a conventional day nursery.

Juvenile delinquency presents Social Services departments with some of their most intractable problems. Eight years after the implementation of parts of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 public debate about the Act and its shortcomings continues. One of the major criticisms has been the shortage of secure accommodation for children on remand. Some of these children abscond and commit further offences and this brings Social Services departments and the community homes system into disrepute; other juveniles on remand are placed in prisons or remand centres which are clearly inappropriate. The Government has begun a planned programme for reducing and eventually banning juveniles in prison and is providing direct grants to local authorities who build secure accommodation.

The 1969 Act should not be judged on the basis of a small group of young people who would disrupt any system. There has been steady growth of imaginative intermediate treatment schemes, often involving voluntary and statutory services which are making a considerable impact on the lives of children brought before the courts. Effective help for young people in the community depends on the ability of all the agencies concerned to work together, including the police, probation and aftercare service, the education welfare service, child guidance, health authorities, youth service and social services departments. Now that the dust has settled on the 1974 reorganization, close working links between all the different organizations concerned are producing results.

Stresses and strains in the family group home system require a re-examination of residential services for children. Almost one-third of children in community homes provided by local authorities are in homes for less than twelve children. The concept of family group homes was one of the cornerstones of the Curtis Committee which reported on the care of children in 1946. Commenting adversely on the then existing institutions the report went on to advocate the creation of units which "should contain not more than twelve children ranging from about 2–15 years . . . . Eight is, we think, the ideal number . . . . For once admitted to the group, the expectation would be that the child should grow up to the age of 15 or 16 as the Housemother's personal charge and should come to feel some of the reliance on her concern and affection that the more fortunate child has towards his own mother."

Developments since 1946 cast serious doubts on the suitability of family group homes as a means of meeting the needs of children in care. The idealistic vision of a houseparent providing a 24 hour 7 days a week service is unattainable. Residential care is not well rewarded and the working conditions are not attractive; many young people who become houseparents do not stay for extended periods, and a high staff turnover in a small home is not only disruptive but also damaging to young children.

New working conditions include the introduction of a "sleeping in allowance" which recognizes the right of houseparents to sleep away from the home when not rostered for duty, and a 40 hour week has now been introduced. Staff can no longer be expected to provide the continuity of care which characterized the philosophy behind the development of family group homes in the 1950's and early 1960's, while the design and layout of these homes is not conducive to shift working by the staff concerned.

The Handicapped

Social Services departments have responsibilities in relation to the physically handicapped, the mentally ill and the mentally handicapped. Many of the physically handicapped are elderly and since the introduction of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970 services for this group of clients have been steadily improving. Unfortunately, in the absence of sufficient finance new developments for the physically handicapped have sometimes taken place at the expense of services for other client groups, particularly the mentally disordered.

Services for the handicapped have benefited greatly from the injection of funds by way of joint financing with health authorities. It is clear that funds spent on community services can reduce pressure on hospital beds and much ingenuity has been shown in joint care planning teams to promote schemes which ensure that patients inappropriately cared for by the health service are transferred to Social Services departments. Schemes have included the appointment of social work staff and home helps together with aids to independence, assessment services, day centres and residential accommodation. Joint financing has encouraged the development of experimental schemes on a joint basis between health and social services authorities and has stimulated closer working arrangements.

The number of mentally ill patients treated in hospital has been steadily declining in recent years and increasing numbers receive care (and some would say fail to receive care) in the community. More day care and sheltered accommodation are required for this group of clients; the shift of emphasis in the care of children away from family group homes could release the buildings for other purposes and many of them would make ideal accommodation as hostels and family group homes for the mentally disordered.

Increasing concern is being expressed about the extent to which adult training centres for the mentally handicapped rely on industrial contract work to provide activities for trainees. Whilst industrial work can be a useful means of occupying the mentally handicapped it is important that the skill and energy of staff in training centres is used to train the mentally handicapped to live as normal lives as possible and to stimulate their minds to the fullest extent. The growing number of trained staff in this field must be matched by imaginative training programmes and more efforts must be made to involve parents in the work of adult training centres.

INSTITUTE OF SOCIAL WELFARE

16 Hempits Grove, Acton Trussell, Stafford, ST17 0SL (0785-71-4238).

The ancestry of the Institute of Social Welfare dates back to the days of the Poor Law. Prior to 1930 the appropriate professional body for staffs employed by Boards of Guardians was the Institute of Poor Law Accounts which was also the recognized examining body. When Poor Law functions were transferred to county and county borough councils in 1930, the Institute of Public Assistance Services became the succeeding body. It was also the examining body until the creation of the Poor Law Examinations Board. The fragmentation of the Public Assistance Services in 1948 led to the dispersal of Public Assistance Staffs amongst government, childrens and welfare departments, and it was from the latter departments that the Institute of Social Welfare was originally founded.

At first its membership was drawn almost exclusively from the staffs of Welfare Departments and Voluntary Bodies concerned with the provision of services under the National Assistance Act, but over the years, and particularly since the creation of Social Services Departments, its membership has widened to include all concerned with the provision of the Personal Social Services and the Health Service.

The constitution originally provided that members must be officers who held appropriate qualifications but during the last few years it has been recognized that social services entail team work, and all members of the team are now entitled to membership. Full membership is still restricted to officers employed by statutory authorities, voluntary bodies or industry in the United Kingdom, but affiliate membership is open to all who are interested in furthering the objects of the Institute, which are and always have been solely the improvement of the services.

While the Institute is not now the examining body, its main work is in education and training and in particular the provision of opportunities for real communication between all members of the caring team, no matter in what field they are occupied. The Institute believes that communication in the social services, as has been demonstrated by many public enquiries, is abysmally poor, and the services could be greatly improved, without the use of extra resources, by improving communication. To this end the Institute organises conferences, seminars and courses and regular educational meetings are held in most of its 13 regional centres. It also publishes a quarterly journal "Welfare".

The Institute is specifically not a trade union and does not indulge in even covert trade union activities. Its motto is "Salus Populi Suprema Lex" which can be loosely translated as "the client comes first".

PERSONAL SOCIAL SERVICES COUNCIL

Brook Hse., 2–16 Torrington Pl., London, WC1E 7HN (01-323 4757); Secretary and Chief Officer: R. T. Clarke, OBE, MA, JP.

The Council owes its origin to recommendations made in the Report of The Committee on Local Authority and Allied Social Services (the Seebohm report) published in 1968, that a single new advisory council should be established to advise Ministers on policy on the personal social services.

The training aspect of this advisory Council was provided in 1971 by the establishment of the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work. The Personal Social Services Council was established in 1973 by the Secretaries of State for Social Services and Wales as an independent advisory, research and development body.

The Council's remit is to advise Ministers on policy issues over the whole range of personal social services and to provide suitable information and guidance for all those concerned with these services in England and Wales. The twenty-nine members are appointed by the Secretaries of State for Social Services and Wales, and are chosen from local authorities, public bodies, the professions, the voluntary movement, universities and other institutions.

The Council has assumed responsibilities formerly undertaken by the advisory Councils concerned with child care (a statutory body) and with physically handicapped persons. Whilst most of its work is concerned directly with central government policy, the Council also seeks to contribute to the activities of the local authority social services departments and to the voluntary movement.

The Council's research activities can be divided into work carried out in-house by the research staff and studies commissioned from outside bodies. The Council is not a general research funding body such as the Social Science Research Council. Its research budget is used to fund studies which are of direct relevance to the Council's work.

In addition to work associated with the commissioned research, the research staff are responsible for a range of other activities including research projects, policy analysis and other work in support of the Council and its committees, functional groups and working parties. The activities undertaken have included the drafting of Council papers in response to requests from government departments and others for advice and comment, the production of background papers, and execution of some research projects. Examples of the latter are studies of staff employed by voluntary organizations in the personal social services, collaboration between health authorities and social services departments, IT schemes and projects, and possible future demand for places in residential accommodation for the elderly. The research staff are also responsible for preparing the Council's annual publication, "Personal Social Services: Basic Information".

Some examples of the current activities of the research staff are a study of the use made by local authorities of the BBC television series for childminders, creation of an information base for the People with Handicaps Group, and the continuing study of national policy and of public expenditure on the personal social services.

CENTRAL COUNCIL FOR EDUCATION AND TRAINING IN SOCIAL WORK

The Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work which came into being on 1 October 1971 is an independent statutory body responsible for the promotion of social work training throughout the United Kingdom. It took over the training functions formerly undertaken by the Central Training Council in Child Care, the recruitment and Training Committee of the Advisory Council for Probation and After Care, the Council for Training in Social Work and some other bodies. It is concerned not only with training in social work for the local authority social services and associated voluntary services, but also for social work in the hospital and education services and in the probation and after care services. Within this broad field it promotes training and recognizes courses leading to social work qualifications. CCETSW is also promoting a new form of training for a wide range of staffs in the social services other than social workers, leading to the Certificate in Social Service. The Council also recognizes courses leading to awards for teachers of mentally handicapped adults, approves courses leading to the Preliminary Certificate in Residential Care and courses of in service study for residential staff and promotes programmes of post qualifying studies. It is unable to make grants for the provision of courses or to support students.

The Institute (the IPS) has about 10,500 Corporate Members and Associates and 4,500 Students. It was formed in 1967 by merging the Purchasing Officers Association (founded in 1932) and the Institute of Public Supplies (1949).

There are IPS members in most sectors of UK industry, commerce and the public services. Together they spend about £75,000m annually on goods and services as well as having an immense stores and distribution responsibility.

The Institute aims to: ensure increasing public recognition of the importance made by its members to the national economy and to the efficiency of the organizations in which they work; to develop the Purchasing and Supply function to enable it to benefit the nation's economy and industrial strength to maximum effect.

Education. The IPS Diploma (post HND level) and Certificates in Stores Supervision are widely accepted as the best means of assessing the calibre of applicants for responsible purchasing/supply posts in both the public and private sectors.

Courses. The IPS provides a wide range of practical short courses (140 p.a.) designed to meet the training needs of all who are engaged in purchasing and supply, at all levels from beginners to directors.

Specialist Conferences. The IPS runs about 35 conferences a year with the aim of bringing together buyers and suppliers and others with a common interest in an industry, activity or material, to discuss current problems and longer-term questions of mutual concern.

Publications. The Institute publishes "Purchasing and Supply Management" and "Procurement Weekly" as well as specialist books.

Technical Advisory Service. A Technical Advisory Service has been established to answer speedily and accurately members' enquiries on professional, technical, legal and contractual matters in the purchasing, supply, stores, materials management and distribution fields.

Personnel Advisory Services. The Institute offers an appointments service for members and a Selection Advisory Service for employers.

Participation in Public Affairs. The IPS offers advice to government and national bodies on matters in which members' professional knowledge and experience can be helpful.

Ethics. The IPS has a strict code of ethics which is binding on its members.

LAMSAC–JACLAP

Local Authorities Management Services and Computer Committee (LAMSAC) incorporating Joint Advisory Committee on Local Authority Purchasing (JACLAP).

Address: LAMSAC, 3 Buckingham Gate, London, SW1E 6JH.

The Joint Advisory Committee on Local Authority Purchasing was set up by agreement between the local authority associations in July 1970 in response to recommendations made by the Joint Review Body on Local Authority Purchasing (HMSO 1968), with the basic aim of promoting efficient purchasing by local authorities and being the principal source of information on the subject. Following local government reorganizations in Scotland, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities was also represented on the Committee.

At the end of 1977 with a view to strengthening and rationalizing the work of the central advisory bodies for local government in relation to purchasing, the local authority Associations decided to merge the activities of the Joint Advisory Committee on Local Authority Purchasing (JACLAP) with those of LAMSAC. LAMSAC'S new responsibilities for local authority purchasing will be handled at the policy level by the main LAMSAC Committee and a Purchasing Sub-Committee involving elected members appointed by the Associations, aided by a Panel comprising purchasing officers and chief officers of the other disciplines in local government nominated by the Associations, together with central government assessors.

Within the broad guidelines agreed through LAMSAC and with the guidance and assistance of the Purchasing Panel, the Purchasing Sub-Committee will seek to improve purchasing performance in local government by:

(a) advising local authorities on the organization of central and co-ordinated purchasing;

(b) providing guidance as to the application of good purchasing techniques and practices and the adoption of specifications suited to local authority needs;

(c) representing local authority interests in work at national level on legislation and administrative measures having implications for local authority purchasing and participating in central activities in relation to specifications and public sector co-operation in purchasing;

(d) the direction of future research into the development of co-ordinated purchasing.

The detailed work is undertaken by the Assistant Director (Purchasing) advised by the professional officers comprising the LAMSAC Purchasing Panel. Advice is freely available from the London office of LAMSAC or any of the ten regional offices.

In the past JACLAP collaborated closely with the Local Government Training Board over the issue of Training Recommendation No. 13 "Supplies Personnel" and the organization of post-entry training courses. It is proposed to continue the practice established by JACLAP of issuing progress reports to local authorities following the LAMSAC Purchasing Sub-Committee meetings and also publish memoranda from time to time on particular subjects of interest in the purchasing and supplies field.

For other services available from LAMSAC see Section 1.

GREATER LONDON COUNCIL SUPPLIES DEPARTMENT

K. L. Fox, BSc, FInstPS, MIWM—Director of Supplies, Greater London Council, Room 306, The County Hall, London, SE1 7PB

In 1965 the GLC Supplies Department inherited the Supplies organization established by London County Council in 1909. The department has maintained a steady continuous growth in real turnover throughout its life: the gross turnover in 1976 77 exceeded £110 million. In addition to other administrative responsibilities concerned with the supply of goods and services in Greater London, the Department has four main trading divisions supplying goods either from stock or by direct supply depending on the relative economics of these methods and the customer requirements.

The Tottenham Hale Division controls general materials including building supplies, food, clothing, furniture and furnishings, mechanical and electronic equipment, science, woodwork, cleaning and similar materials and had a turnover of £52 million in 1976/77.

The Southfields Division provides educational materials and certain office material including paper, stationery, handicrafts, books, art, needlework, sports and other materials. This division also negotiates the direct supply under joint contracts of petroleum based products including heating and gas oil, petrol, marine fuels and other specialized products. This division has a turnover of £42 million in 1976 77.

The Motor Transport Division provides a design and specification service for specialized vehicle buses, ambulances, etc, the repair and maintenance of vehicles and plant, and the supply, under contract, of tyres, batteries and other vehicle components.

The Printing Division also offers reprographic, printing, word processing services and other technical advice. The Division has an award winning Graphic Design team and its own production unit providing services to a wide range of public bodies and local authorities in the Greater London area and the Home Counties.

The number of authorities and public bodies using the GLC Supplies Department facilities and contracts has increased rapidly. In addition to supplying all the GLC/ILEA departments, the other 12,000 customer locations include the majority of the London Boroughs, the County of Buckinghamshire, the London Ambulance Service, TWA and many other professional and public educational and non profit making bodies in and around London.

The GLC Supplies Department is organized on a cost centre basis and separate accounts are maintained for each centre: these are published annually in the form of a brochure. In addition to price advantages, the department offers its customers administrative economies in ordering, invoice clearance and computerized sales billing, stock holding and distribution.

Review by M. P. COLLINS, BA, DipTP, FRTPI

Throughout 1977 the attention of politicians, planners, academics and the media was focused upon the problems of Britain's inner city areas. The need for more basic understanding of the problems and needs of inner city areas was demonstrated at a conference funded by the Sunday Times and Gulbenkian Trust. Although there was general agreement that these areas could not, and should not, be allowed to die (a conclusion which would appear fairly self-evident to the layman), there was little agreement as to what measures should be adopted to arrest the further decline of inner city areas. Various courses of action were advocated including the relaxation of planning controls and procedures, new ways of financing small enterprises, the concentration of investment in the most needy areas, and a concerted effort to develop the vacant land holdings of the nationalized industries and other public bodies. Perhaps predictably, there was no agreement about the role of, let alone the need for, private sector involvement, notwithstanding the fact that it is the decline of privately owned manufacturing firms which gives most cause for concern. A report prepared by Merseyside's County Planning Officer, Miss Audrey Lees, highlights the desperate plight of Liverpool if current trends remain unchecked. It paints a grim picture of prevailing high unemployment, empty shops and schools, whilst in some districts upwards of 30% of the houses will be vacant within the next fifteen years. Understandably, in the light of these predictions, the report argues that the amount of investment in employment generation and housing during the next ten years should be increased from £2,400 million to £4,500 million. It is questionable, however, whether this increase can or should be achieved at the expense of neighbouring areas such as Warrington, Hatton, Ellesmere Port and Skelmersdale, as the report suggests.

The April budget announced that £100 million will be forthcoming over the next two years for new building and rehabilitation work in the inner city areas in England and Wales. It is envisaged that this money will be spent on housing improvement, industrial site preparation, factory building, public buildings, and general land reclamation. The Urban Programme, which is presently supervized by the Home Office, will be transferred to the Department of the Environment and recast to include economic and environmental considerations in addition to social problems; and its present annual budget of £50 million will be increased to £125 million by 1980. The annual budget for Scotland's Urban Programme will likewise be increased from £3·6 million to £20 million by 1980. In this context it is worth recalling that a report issued by the National Community Development Project concludes that the various government initiatives in respect of urban deprivation have failed to have any significant impact upon poverty. Too much emphasis has been placed upon the "management of poor people" instead of the elimination of poverty, with the result that much of the £80 million which has been spent during the past ten years on the Urban Programme, Educational Priority Areas, and Local Community Development Projects has merely resulted in streamlining management techniques and procedures.

The Government White Paper "Policy for the Inner Cities" represents the outcome of a major review of inner city policy, and it draws on the experience of these earlier initiatives. It comes as no surprise to learn that many inner areas are deemed to suffer ". . . in a marked way, and to an unacceptable extent, from economic decline, physical decay, and adverse social conditions". Although it is recognized that many small towns and older industrial areas evidence substantial decay, bad housing, poor employment and social problems, and that deprivation is just as likely to be found in post-war council housing, particular emphasis will be placed upon the inner areas of the big cities ". . . because of the scale and intensity of their problems and the rapidity of run-down in population and employment". The publication of this White Paper confirms the Government's determination to play an active part in helping local authorities to improve inner area conditions. While the kind, and range, of remedial measures may well vary from area to area, reflecting local circumstances and the extent to which solutions may lie outside the inner areas, Government policy will seek to achieve four main aims viz:

(a) strengthening the economies of the inner areas and the prospects of their residents;
(b) improving the physical fabric of the inner areas and making their environment more attractive;
(c) alleviating social problems; and
(d) securing a new balance between the inner areas and the rest of the city region in terms of population and jobs.

Local authorities will be expected to redirect their policies to give greater assistance to inner areas and bring about a more co-ordinated approach and make better use of resources etc. For example more tolerance of "non-conforming" industrial and commercial uses will need to be shown, and greater care taken to ensure that existing firms and businesses are not displaced by redevelopment schemes. The delivery of social services may need to be co-ordinated more effectively at the local level to ensure that those in special need, such as the aged, the handicapped and the under-fives, receive priority and adequate support.

The Government believes that new forms of organization and new methods of working need to be tried and "special partnerships" will be offered to a strictly limited number of local authorities (both counties and districts) to facilitate the regeneration of inner city areas. These new partnership schemes will comprise representatives from central government and local authorities, with additional members appointed by the health, water and police authorities where necessary, and they will be "chaired" by a Minister of State. The initial task of these partnerships will be to draw up an inner area programme for early implementation, based on an analysis of local conditions. These inner area programmes will be supported by urban programme grants, and they will also help to identify the priorities within the main policies and programmes of central and local government. Partnership Schemes have so far been offered to Birmingham Liverpool and Manchester–Salford, (which will all receive £11 million) London Docklands (£17 million), Lambeth, Newcastle-Gateshead, Hackney–Islington (£5 million) and it is understood that between 1979–1982 a further £150 million will be allocated between the various partnership schemes. Mr. Peter Shore, Secretary of State for the Environment, confirms that other areas, outside the partnership schemes, will also require special attention, and a further £25 million will be made available to assist North and South Tyneside Sunderland, Middlesbrough, Bolton, Oldham, Wirral, Bradford, Hull, Leeds, Sheffield, Wolverhampton, Leicester, Nottingham and Hammersmith.

The future of the new towns programme has been increasingly in doubt due to the rival and conflicting claims of inner city areas. Although Mr. Peter Shore has confirmed that there will be "no abrupt reversal of plans and decisions" he has decided, in principle, to reduce the 'target populations' for Milton Keynes, Northampton and Peterborough, and indicated that there will be no further major expansion of any of the earlier series of new towns. In a House of Commons written answer he confirmed that " . . . with the exception of Central Lancashire the forward programmes of other new towns are so advanced that there is little scope for material changes". Mr. Hugh Rossi, the Conservative Party's front bench spokesman on housing appears to share the view that the success of many new towns has been bought at the expense of inner cities. In a speech made on March 18th he stated that the nation could not afford to develop a third generation of new towns on the ambitious scale presently envisaged and also meet the investment needs of Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle, Glasgow and Inner London. This broad level of political agreement may help to explain why some of the New Town Development Corporations have somewhat belatedly recognised the fact that they could do more to assist families caught in the inner city 'poverty trap'. The general manager of Washington New Town, County Durham, has defined the contribution that the new towns programme has already made, notably the reduction of residential densities in congested urban areas, and he argues that more development—not less—is needed in the new towns if more low-income families are going to be encouraged to move out of the inner cities. In view of the above arguments and counter-arguments, it is surprising that Mr. Peter Shore has allowed the Central Lancashire New Town project to go ahead, howbeit with a severely reduced programme to accommodate some 23 000 inhabitants. (NB the initial programme envisaged that accommodation would be provided for some 100,000 inhabitants). It is believed that the factors which influenced this decision included British Leyland's plans for the local expansion of their truck division the areas' good transport network and system of communications, the large amount of land already available for industrial development, and the constructive relationship which exists between the Development Corporation and Preston.

Several 'official' reports have called upon the Government to change their regional policies, notably in respect of the present prohibitions upon development in the Midlands and South East, and the Government is also being pressured to redirect development incentives to different areas and industries. The West Midland County Council's annual economic review presents the case for parts of their inner city areas to receive "assisted area status" while the Standing Conference on London and South East Regional Planning advocates that public policies and resources should no longer be used to encourage the movement of people and firms out of London. The Yorkshire and Humberside Economic Planning Council have questioned whether Scotland and Wales should continue to receive disproportionately high shares of aid from national funds, bearing in mind that parts of the region now exhibit higher rates of unemployment than some parts of Scotland which are accorded Special Development Area or Development Area status. In this context it should be noted that Grimsby has been declared a Development Area and thus will qualify for additional aid and help to reduce the unemployment problems caused by the decline of the fishing industry. The Government, however, when responding to the Strategy Review of the Yorkshire and Humberside Region, have confirmed that they intend to maintain present regional industrial policies and not spread the available money "too thinly". Future regional planning will have particular regard to "local decision centres" i.e. towns such as Leeds, Sheffield and Harrogate which offer better prospects for job creation. Although the Government recognizes that continuity is important because frequent changes undermine the effectiveness of policy and create undesirable uncertainty for industry, there have been a number of changes concerning the designation of assisted areas. Lanark, Cumnock, Kilbirnie, Dundee and Arbroath have all been accorded Special Development Area status, while Hull, and Shotton have been accorded Development Area Status. Aberdeen, Malton, Northallerton, Pickering, Richmond and Thirsk are all to be "demoted" to Intermediate Area status, whereas the applications of Bridlington, Fleetwood, Lancaster, Skegness and Southport for Development Area status have been rejected. Mr. Eric Varley, the Secretary of State for Industry, has accepted the National Enterprise Board's recommendation that there should be wider differentials between the financial aid given to Special Development Areas and the other assisted areas. In future, the Government will increase, from two to three years, the interest free period loans and grants for viable employment generating projects. Government assistance to attract industrial investment into the depressed areas has been substantially increased during the year 1976–1977. Some £410 million of development grants were made to companies which either set up new factories or installed new plant and machinery, an increase of 26% on the previous year's total. Mr. Alan Williams, Minister of State for Industry, announced a further extension to the Government's advance factory programme which will provide some 59 factories at a cost of £6 million. This is the tenth in a series of new programmes initiated since mid 1974, and altogether some 300 factories, providing a total of 4 million square feet of industrial floor space, have been built. It is hoped that this endeavour will provide an additional 16,000 jobs.

Mr. Peter Shore has confirmed that the Government intend to relax ODP controls, when seeking to renew the Office Development Permit Act and thus extend the life of these controls for a further five years. It is understood that the present ODP limit will be increased from 15,000 to 30,000 sq. feet, and that development which will provide less than 200 jobs will be exempt (i.e. approximately 55% of all applications for ODP's). The Location of Offices Bureau, which was established in 1963 to "lure" firms out of London, will now be expected to reverse their present operational terms of reference and try to attract firms back to central London. Understandably, businessmen who have already been forced to move out of London by regional planning policies, high rents, high rates, congestion, commuting and parking difficulties etc., are unlikely to respond favourably to this latest change in policy.

Mr. Peter Shore has also expressed a desire to review the present distribution of powers and responsibilities of local authorities with a view to re-asserting the role of the big city councils outside the Metropolitan Councils. Should this change come about then towns such as Bristol, Norwich, Leicester, Nottingham, Plymouth and Hull would become responsible for education and social services. The Association of District Councils has also called for a major redistribution of functions because the present over-lapping between County and District Councils causes confusion, conflict, frustration, uncertainty, extra expense, and much wasted time. There is widespread support among the 333 District Councils for early changes to bring more services closer to the people. Few will doubt the need to look again at the present distribution of local authority planning powers and responsibilities, bearing in mind that the overt conflict between Swansea City Council and West Glamorgan County Council continues to drag on bringing little credit to the present planning system. It is understood that the City's planning officers will no longer co-operate with their County counterparts due to a disagreement over the determination of planning applications, whereby the County Council will not approve many of the developments which the City Council favour and wish to see implemented. Mr. Maurice Howell, the City's Director of Planning, has instructed his officers " . . . not to spend any more time negotiating, and bring the County's unreasonable decisions to the Members of the City Council". According to a County Council spokesman, however, the City Council were guilty of a sweeping generalization, bearing in mind that it was " . . . not uncommon for a County Council to turn down planning applications, even if they had been granted by a District Council, if there are thought to be reasonable grounds under highways regulations to do so".

The South Hampshire Structure Plan has finally been approved, with modifications by the Secretary of State, some three years after it was submitted to him for consideration. Although some thirty five structure plans have so far been submitted to the Secretary of State, it is becoming clear that almost one third of the county structure plans will not be ready in time to meet the DoE's target date of April 1978. There are some interesting geographical variations in respect of structure plan preparation e.g. in the South West Region not one structure plan seems likely to meet the target date, whereas in the South East Region only one County Council looks like failing to meet the April deadline. This means that a further six years may elapse before England and Wales is "covered" by approved structure plans. It is hardly surprising, therefore, that a report approved in principle by the County Planning Officers' Society calls for a major overhaul of the present planning system, with a view to integrating the preparation of structure and local plans into one development plan process. Particular attention needs to be focused, so it is argued, upon streamlining the plan-making timetable to ensure that structure and local plans keep abreast of, and actually shape, events. Growing concern is also expressed at the independent actions of the Regional Water Authorities, whose long-term capital expenditure programmes frequently seem to ignore structure plan policies and proposals. Similar concern is expressed regarding the Department of Transport's Regional Highways Traffic Model which also appears to operate outside the statutory planning process.

The Environment Sub-Committee of the House of Commons Expenditure Committee were not wholly persuaded " . . . that the respective spheres of the regional plan and the structure plan are clearly and satisfactorily defined". They concluded that regional plans tend to go into " . . . a degree of detail more appropriate to the structure plan, yet at present there is no framework of regional government in England and the existing regional boundaries are unsuitable for many planning purposes". An example of this "uneasy" relationship between regional plans and structure plans was demonstrated when the South East Economic Planning Council expressed doubts about the emphasis that the Surrey County Council's structure plan places on the protection of the environment and the need to prevent further urban development. The SEEPC argue that these policies should not be applied uniformly over the whole county, and that the County Council should accept the need for some selective growth including manufacturing industry. It should not be forgotten, however, that structure plan policies sometimes prove equally unacceptable to individual district councils and appear to interfere unduly in local matters. Chester City Council, for example, have unanimously rejected the Cheshire County Structure Plan on the grounds that it represents a " . . . 1984 threat to democracy". This serves as a timely reminder of the fact that the exercise of statutory planning powers can no longer be viewed as a "value free" technical operation. More attention clearly must be paid to political and ideological considerations, including the distributional outcomes of planning policies and the proposals they give rise to, including development control decisions.

The Department of the Environment has instructed the London Borough of Lambeth to carry out further public consultation in respect of their Waterloo District Plan, because they failed to comply with the statutory regulations governing public participation. According to the DoE the Borough Council failed to give adequate publicity to the plan, and failed to give people both sufficient time and an adequate opportunity to make representations and participate fully. As a consequence the Borough Council have had to re-advertise the plan's existence and hold further public meetings. In fairness to Lambeth it should be pointed out that the public were first consulted in January 1973, and that a series of public meetings were held in the spring and summer of 1974. It is very questionable whether the literal observance of every statutory requirement will generate any further public response — let alone produce any new information or viewpoints etc. — bearing in mind that the Waterloo District is a "transitional" area with a declining and ageing population. Some people may well feel that it is now too late to try and arrest the continued incursion of major institutional and commercial land uses, a process which has been taking place for the last sixty years or so.

The Eight Report from the Expenditure Committee of the House of Commons confirmed that there is a lot of conflicting evidence on the connected questions of delay and the resulting resource costs. Developers continue to argue that the present planning procedures lead to intolerable delays whereas spokesmen for local communities maintain that they are afforded insufficient time within which to formulate and present their views. Understandably, most local planning authorities consider that it is more important to spend time and trouble arriving at a "good" decision in planning terms than to seek a quick decision for its own sake. The Report recommends that a small number of Planning Assessors should be appointed to give help and advice to local planning authorities and to monitor their performance by continued and informal contact. Inefficient local authorities would also be penalized, on appeal, and the Secretary of State is asked to consider the desirability of awarding costs when he reverses on appeal a planning decision which blatantly contradicts national policy as expressed in a Departmental Circular. The Report also recommends that time limits should be imposed on consultations with statutory undertakers, and that the General Development Order should be amended to allow the Secretary of State to delegate responsibility for considering applications affecting trunk roads to the County Council concerned. It is also considered that Inspectors should issue decisions, on cases transferred to them, within two weeks of the end of a public enquiry or the receipt of written representations; and that the DoE should issue revised guidance to local authorities on the aesthetic aspects of development control, including the preparation of design guides.

A report commissioned by the DoE draws attention to the present indiscriminate publication of local authority design guides, especially in the South East of England where there is a preponderance of private sector house building. Concern is expressed about the wide variations in the range and quantity of the advice contained in these design guides, and the variations in each local authority's determination to insist upon the observance of their design requirements. It is hardly surprising, therefore, that the report also confirms that there is a need " . . . for much greater consistency in the design guidance material which local authorities provide for private house-builders; together with a need for greater collaboration and liaison between counties and districts regarding the design standards and policies which are adopted in order to resolve conflicting objectives such as highway standards and visual policies". The Report also calls for: a clearer definition of all such published policies on design, a more flexible and sensitive approach on the part of local authorities to highway design, greater regard to the financial implications of design standards, and a re-assessment of the scope and function of the outline planning procedure.

A DoE Report on environmental impact analysis argues that Britain needs a method of measuring the effects on the environment of major development proposals. It recommends that a thorough evaluation of the impacts of a major development should be undertaken as soon as the proposal is being considered, and that the costs should be shared between the developer and the local planning authority. The Report also suggests that a period of twelve months, as opposed to the present eight weeks, should be allowed under the General Development Order to enable the environmental impact of major developments to be determined. Once again this highlights the unenviable position of local planning authorities whereby they are expected to expedite the determination of planning applications whilst undertaking costly and time-consuming evaluations of the merits of development proposals. The Government should stop placing impossible demands upon local planning authorities and recognize the fact that it is important to reach the right decision even if it entails delay.

Mr. Guy Barnett, Under Secretary at the Department of the Environment, has confirmed that more appeals against enforcement notices will be determined by Inspectors, in an attempt to reduce the average time taken to issue planning decisions in respect of enforcement notices. At present, the average time taken to issue an appeal decision is sixteen months when the DoE determines an appeal compared with ten months when an Inspector determines same. Understandably, these delays have been severely criticized because they nullify the effect of enforcement notices and enable alleged breaches of planning control to continue unabated, often with unacceptable environmental consequences, for far too long. These inordinate delays often enable unscrupulous developers to make sufficient profit from illegal operations by the time that the appeal decision is made known. The Town and Country Planning (Amendment) Act 1977 has introduced the concept of a Stop Notice in an attempt to rectify this problem.

A series of appeal decisions made by Mr. Peter Shore confirms that Government planners still look askance at hypermarket and superstore developments, notwithstanding the fact that shoppers favour such developments. Tesco were refused planning permission to construct a 90,000 square foot store at Newton Abbot, in Devon, on the grounds that it would adversely affect the retail trade of small centres at Ashburton and Bovey Tracey, with consequential " . . . serious social, economic, financial and planning consequences" for these two small towns and the rural areas they serve. Sainsbury, likewise, were refused permission to construct a 53,800 square foot store at Chichester because of the effect that it would have on traffic congestion and the environment of the adjacent area. Although the Co-operative Society's proposal to construct a 65,000 square foot store at Sandford, near Oxford, was recommended for approval by the Inspector, the Secretary of State decided to refuse planning permission on the grounds that it was situated in a green belt area whose shopping needs were still being determined. Similar proposals form the subject of a further four public enquiry hearings and nine planning appeals, and it remains to be seen whether the supermarket combines are justified in complaining at the Government planners lack of consistency and knowledge of retail trends. It would appear that Cardiff's "ill-fated" shopping centre development will finally get the "go ahead", now that the City Council have approved, in principle, the purchase of some eight acres of land in the town centre at a cost of £3 million. Originally (i.e. some 20 years ago) it was envisaged that this scheme would cover some 77 acres of land in the town centre, but due to a combination of circumstances including local opposition and lack of funds, Ravenseft Properties felt obliged to pull out. Although another consortium agreed to develop a seven acre site and provide some 500,000 square feet of shopping and a public library, even this scheme met with local opposition, reflecting the fear that the town was already provided with too much shopping floor space. The use of public resources in this type of speculative enterprise at a time when public expenditure has been severely pruned, has also been the subject of local complaint.

The Government's Housing Policy Review makes over seventy recommendations in respect of the nation's future housing policy, including a new local authority housing subsidy an increase in council rents to keep pace with changes in personal incomes, and the retention of the present principle of general assistance in the form of tax relief for owner occupiers and subsidies to the public sector. The Green Paper argues that it would not be reasonable, or politically feasible, to pursue "some theoretical or academic dogma". In future however, there will be greater emphasis on house improvement in conjunction with continuing efforts to offer people a greater choice of housing tenure. Building Societies will be expected, and encouraged, to play a larger and less inhibited role in the provision of housing finance. Direct Government help will be forthcoming for the first-time house purchaser, and the Government have also announced their intention to introduce a new system of housing investment programmes whereby local authorities will be expected to draw up four-year housing investment programmes covering the whole range of their housing activities. It is envisaged that these programmes will have a major influence in helping to decide national priorities in respect of housing finance. Each local housing authority will be required to submit a housing strategy and investment programme, supported by additional information about present levels of population, households and housing stock, together with expected changes over the next four years. Their spending proposals will have to itemise the whole range of council housing activities such as new housebuilding, slum clearance, private sector improvement grants, home loans and loans to housing associations.

The Housing Corporation's experiment in Birmingham, which entailed the construction of cheap houses for sale, appears to have failed in so far as only 16 of the 174 houses built on inner city sites have so far been sold. The construction of a further 29 such houses in the nearby suburb of Frankley has proved more successful, in that only 8 houses remain unsold. These houses were all made available on the so-called 'half-and-half' basis, whereby selected categories of people are allowed to secure possession of a house with a £5 down payment. The repayment terms entail a mortgage on 50% of the cost of the house together with 50% of the normal rent for a council house. Once again the sale of council housing in London has received the go-ahead now that the Conservative-controlled GLC have announced their intention to sell 70,000 of the 218,000 houses currently owned by the Council. Most of the houses which will be sold are located in pre-war cottage estates in the outer London suburbs. A number of recent Ministerial decisions in respect of compulsory purchase orders confirm that local authorities will have to exercise greater care when designating potential sites for housing redevelopment. The Secretary of State has refused to confirm two compulsory purchase orders approved by Waltham Forest Borough Council, without recourse to a public enquiry which so it was said, would constitute a waste of everyone's time. The Borough Council's £10.5 million redevelopment scheme would have entailed the demolition of some 500 Victorian houses just north of Stratford Broadway. This scheme was rejected because it would cause unacceptable social upheaval, and because the cost of the development was deemed excessive. Liverpool City Council have also had a C.P.O. rejected because the proposed development was not justified on housing grounds, although it might be desirable on planning terms. The City Council were criticized for making the original order on the grounds that the land in question was required for council housing, and then stated at the subsequent public enquiry that it was intended to develop the land for low cost houses for sale. The Secretary of State also refused to support the proposal by two London Boroughs (Lambeth and Wandsworth) to develop 107 acres of land at Tolworth, in the outer London Borough of Kingston-upon-Thames. It was considered that the land in question, which comprises farmland and woodland, should perform a green belt function separating the suburbs of Tolworth and Surbiton.

British Nuclear Fuels' £635 million redevelopment plan for their factory at Windscale, Cumbria, inevitably generated heated debate, especially after the first phase of the development received planning permission from the Cumbria County Council. Phase One seeks to refurbish the existing facilities for reprocessing irradiated magnox fuel from reactors in Britain, Japan and Italy, to ensure that the plant will possess sufficient capacity to treat the spent fuel from reactors which will be operating in the 1990's. Mr. Justice Parker, assisted by Sir Edward Pochin (a physicist) and Sir Frederick Warner (a chemical engineer), was appointed to preside over what turned out to be the most expensive and verbose public enquiry so far held in the UK. When opening the enquiry Mr. Justice Parker reminded participants that it was a unique event, because the issues which required investigation would not only affect those already alive and living in the area but also those persons who will be born for many years to come. In essence, Mr. Justice Parker, wanted participants to address their submissions to three basic questions viz:

1. Should spent uranium oxide fuels from nuclear reactors be processed in Britain?
2. If the answer is yes, should these fuels be processed at the Windscale nuclear plant?
3. If the answer is yes, should the proposed capacity of the reprocessing plant be doubled to enable spent fuel from other countries to be reprocessed?

The case in favour of the development was based upon the need to keep pace with technology and avoid a serious handicap in the future; the great potential of foreign earnings in keeping down the cost of reprocessing fuel; the fact that long term highly active waste could be converted into its most suitable form for storage until an alternative method of disposal is discovered; that reprocessing has considerable advantages in respect of the conservation of energy resources because the recovered uranium and plutonium could be used again; and that the continued operation of fast-breeder reactors in the 1980's would necessitate the rapid construction of several re-processing plants in the 1990's, if the present proposal was not implemented. The case against the development was based upon the desirability of keeping future options open regarding the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel; that the UK only needed sufficient capacity to reprocess its own waste; that the site was ill-chosen; that terrorists could hold the country to ransom; that the predicted energy demand has been over-estimated; and that the feasibility and safety of the proposed disposal arrangements are unproven. This enquiry ranged over a host of issues and witnesses came from as far afield as America to give evidence about alternative energy sources. It is estimated that this 100 day enquiry cost over £2 million and it generated over 3 million words of evidence.

The Government White Paper on Transport Policy confirms that although further cuts will be made to the road programme, the Government will continue to support the present level of public transport services—notably in rural areas. It also calls for more local decision-making in transport matters, with greater public involvement in determining the future of rural railway services, and it promises wider powers to local authorities so that they can accept greater responsibility for transport matters. In future, the road programme will adopt a selective and modest approach to road construction. The Conservative controlled GLC, however, intend to revive road construction in a bid to strengthen the capital's economic base by attracting industry and commerce. Although there will be no return to the ill-fated motorway box, this change of heart reflects a growing realization by the public that the needs of industry and commerce cannot be served without a real improvement to the existing network of trunk roads. The GLC has already approved a plan for a new road between Limehouse and Canning Town to facilitate the revival of the Docklands.

ROYAL TOWN PLANNING INSTITUTE

26 Portland Pl., London, W1N 4BE (01-636 9107).

Founded in 1914 as a completely independent body, the Royal Town Planning Institute represents the town planning profession in Britain. Its first Presidents were Thomas Adams, a leading figure in the garden city movement, and Sir Raymond Unwin, the architect and town planner.

Its object is "to advance the science and art of town planning in all its aspects, including local, regional and national planning, for the benefit of the public".

Extending knowledge of planning and ensuring that its members meet high standards of competence and integrity are basic aims and the professional training of town planners is therefore a high priority. The RTPI conducts examinations, encourages universities and other higher education institutions to develop schools of planning, arranges meetings and conferences, provides a bibliographic, information and library service, publishes a journal and other publications and administers a Code of Professional Conduct.

Meetings are held at the Portland Place headquarters in London and in the provinces, and some are held jointly with other professional bodies. The Annual Conference is open to non-members, and the Town and Country Planning Summer School is held at a British university each September and sponsored by the RTPI.

The library of reference/and periodicals is housed in Portland Place. By applying to the librarian, members can also use the excellent library of the Department of the Environment in Ruislip which carries the major part of the RTPI's book stock.

THE ECONOMIC PLANNING MACHINERY

ENGLISH REGIONS

The Secretary of State for the Environment has the leading responsibility for the Government's regional policy. As part of his functions in this field he is responsible for the Regional Economic Planning Councils and Economic Planning Boards in England.

In England there are eight economic planning regions: Northern, Yorkshire and Humberside, East Midlands, East Anglia, South East, South West, West Midlands and North West. There are an Economic Planning Council and an Economic Planning Board in each region. (Scotland also has an Economic Council and an Economic Planning Board; there is a Welsh Council and a Welsh Planning Board; and Northern Ireland has an Economic Council.)

The Planning Councils

Each Economic Planning Council in England has some thirty part-time members who are appointed by the Secretary of State as individuals with a wide knowledge and experience of their region. Businessmen, trade unionists and members or officers of local authorities make up the majority of the members; the rest are drawn from the universities, social services, agriculture, and other interests in the regions.

The Economic Planning Councils are advisory bodies, with no executive functions. They collaborate with regional groups of local planning authorities and with central government in the preparation of broad economic and land-use strategies which will provide a regional framework for national and local planning and investment decisions. They also advise on the regional implications of national policies and developments.

The Planning Boards

The Economic Planning Boards consist of civil servants who are normally the senior representatives in the regional offices of the Government Departments concerned with the various aspects of regional planning and their chairmen are the Regional Directors of the Departments of the Environment and Transport.

The main tasks of the Economic Planning Boards are to co-ordinate the regional policies and planning work of Departments and to assist the Economic Planning Councils in their work on their planning strategies in the regions by providing them with information and advice.

Co-ordination

Co-ordination of the regional planning work of Government Departments is made easier by housing the regional planning staffs of the various Departments in the same building or in close proximity. In each regional office there is a secretariat and a research section serving both the Council and the Board.

There is continuing close consultation between the regions, mainly through periodic meetings of the Chairmen of the Councils and Boards.

SCOTLAND, WALES AND NORTHERN IRELAND

The Scottish Economic Council is appointed by the Secretary of State for Scotland, who is also its chairman. An Under Secretary, who is also the Chief Economic Adviser to the Scottish Office, acts as chairman of the Economic Planning Board for Scotland. The Council, which has no formal terms of reference, provides a forum for discussion of all aspects of Scottish economic development; and the Planning Board combines representatives of the main Departments and Agencies concerned with the planning of economic development in Scotland.

In Wales there is a Welsh Council with somewhat wider terms of reference than the Regional Economic Planning Councils in England. The Chairman and members of the Welsh Council are appointed by the Secretary of State for Wales and the Chairman of the Welsh Planning Board is an Under Secretary at the Welsh Office.

In Northern Ireland an Economic Council representative of trade unions, employers' organizations and independent interests was established in September 1977 by the Secretary of State to provide Government with advice on economic policy. The Council is independent of Government, and employs its own staff.

PLANNING IN THE GREATER LONDON AREA

The GLC is the strategic planning authority for Greater London as a whole. Working closely with the 32 London Boroughs and the City Corporation, the GLC plans the overall policies and framework for its own actions and the actions of the many private and public agencies which together serve 7 million people – roughly one-seventh of the total population of England and Wales – in an area of 610 square miles.

The GLC is responsible for London's structure plan (the Greater London Development Plan) which gives statutory expression to strategic planning policies. The approved GLDP became operative in August 1976 and provides the framework within which the London borough councils are preparing Local Plans. The basic objectives are the same – to provide for the Londoner and his family an adequately sized home set in an acceptable environment; a choice of jobs within easy reach of home; accessible facilities for education, recreation, social services, etc.; an ability to move about easily and safely on foot, by public transport, and by the reasonable use of the car; and an opportunity to participate in creating an environment which will attain the requirements of civilized living.

To achieve these objectives the GLC works in close co-operation with the many interests involved, including employers' organizations, trade unions, transport undertakings, etc., as well as the borough councils and government departments.

The Borough Councils are the planning authorities in their own areas. They have, however, to refer certain applications to the GLC for direction. These include applications having more than just local significance, e.g. large concert halls, stadia, university buildings, airports or London termini, and also those for developments within the GLC's own comprehensive development areas. The Borough Councils deal with the remainder themselves but seek the GLC's direction on applications for major shopping developments, high buildings, substantial office or industrial development, development in the Green Belt, works to buildings of architectural or historic interest, departures from the Initial Development Plan, and proposals which might affect a GLC road or its responsibilities for traffic and transport.

Although plans for most of the major local centres are prepared by the borough councils, the GLC is involved in larger development schemes, such as Thamesmead and Covent Garden, and the 8½ square miles of the London Docklands where, following extensive public consultation, a Joint Committee comprising representatives from the GLC and the five boroughs concerned have approved a strategy for the development of this area.

CENTRE FOR ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES

The Centre for Environmental Studies is an independent research body, to carry out and disseminate research into problems of urban and regional planning. It was created in 1967. Financial support of some £600,000 p.a. is provided by the Department of the Environment. Further support comes from Trusts and Foundations. The Centre started by sponsoring over fifty projects in some twenty universities and institutions in Britain. There is now a central research team in London and work is no longer commissioned outside. Study groups, conferences and seminars are a central part of the work. The Centre supports a Planning Exchange in Glasgow. Over one hundred research and conference papers have been published in one of the four series of CES publications and a number of books relating to work already completed are published in a joint CES HEB series. The Annual Report is available free. There is a mailing list.

The Chairman of the Governing Body is Lord Llewelyn Davies. The Vice Chairman is Sir Frank Marshall. There are up to fifteen Governors. The Director is Professor Christopher Foster, the Secretary is Rowland Eustace and the Research Secretary is Christopher Stoddart, 62 Chandos Place, London, WC2N 4HH (01 240 3424).

Review by GRAHAM HARRISON
Secretary, Wessex Water Authority.

Introduction

The last review article in the water section of the Year Book was by Mr. D. J. Kinnersley, Senior Economic Adviser to the National Water Council. This summarized the position which water authorities found themselves in some two years after reorganization and touched on the functions of the central bodies concerned with water. It was in time to report the publication in March 1976 of the Government Consultation Document on the Review of the Industry in England and Wales and to record the welcome within the industry for the Government's endorsement of the basic structure of substantial all-purpose authorities with boundaries founded on river catchments. The article expressed the hope "that such changes as are to be made may be decided and implemented quickly so that uncertainty and disturbance do not hamper the gains in efficiency and new patterns of organization now developing. The customers no less than the staff find frequent change confusing and unsettling."

The enhanced role of the National Water Authority which would replace the present National Water Council and would incorporate other central bodies was also touched on.

The White Paper

In July 1977, following response from water authorities and others to its consultation paper on the industry, the Government published its White Paper entitled "The Water Industry in England and Wales . . . The Next Steps" (Command No. 6876).

This came at the end of a testing period in which the relatively new water authorities had coped on the whole successfully with a severe drought which was variously estimated as being from 1 in 700 to 1 in 1000 years. Not only that, but when the drought broke towards the end of August 1976, the weather pattern in most parts of the country was completely reversed. In Wessex, for instance, September was the wettest since 1918 and the second wettest since 1777, and this above average precipitation was maintained throughout the winter.

Rather as some military men will refer to having had a "good war", most water authorities felt at the end of the emergency that they had had a good drought in that their oganizations had withstood the test and come out of it stronger. To quote from the Wessex Annual Report for 1976/77, "the multi functional organization established by the Authority at operational level greatly facilitated this approach to the problems of the drought and the lessons learned under stress will have a permanent effect on future planning".

The resilience shown by the recently reorganized industry in coping with the drought and its aftermath confirmed the Government in its resolve to leave the basic regional structures unchanged, whilst at the same time strengthening its view that planning in the industry must in future be coordinated on a national basis. These twin concepts were reflected in the White Paper. The following summary is that contained in the White Paper itself:

"The Government's principal decisions set out in this White Paper are as follows:

(i) A new National Water Authority (NWA) will be established replacing the National Water Council and incorporating the Central Water Planning Unit, the Water Research Centre, and part of the Water Data Unit.

(ii) The NWA will have as one of their main tasks the preparation of a national strategy for water services, which they will submit to the Government.

(iii) The NWA will have powers to ensure that the annual plans of the regional water authorities (RWA's) conform with the national strategy.

(iv) The Welsh Water Authority and the Severn Trent Water Authority will be responsible for their activities in Wales to the Welsh Assembly, once established; the Assembly will be required to promote and secure the execution of their policy for water in Wales in harmony with the national strategy.

(v) Responsibility for the British Waterways Board will be transferred to the NWA. Meanwhile further work will proceed on the permanent arrangements for the waterways, and in particular the way they should be financed.

(vi) The Inland Waterways Amenity Advisory Council and the Water Space Amenity Commission will be replaced by a single body.

(vii) The basis of RWA membership will remain substantially unchanged though there will be an increase of some 20% of local authority membership to lessen the problem of under-representation of district councils in some regions.

(viii) Water authorities will be given greater discretion and flexibility over the establishment and maintenance of sewerage agency arrangements with local authorities.

(ix) Water authorities will assume responsibility for the collection of sewage from properties not connected to main drainage; and a measure of relief will be afforded to householders who have faced high charges.

The aim of the present Review has been to ensure that the benefits of the reorganization introduced by the 1973 Act are consolidated while the identified structural weaknesses are remedied. Experience over the last three years, and especially during the 1976 drought has confirmed the need for a strong central planning authority, capable of preparing and seeing implemented a corporate strategy for the industry. In addition there are a number of areas where it has become clear that the balance of advantage lies with some shifts in the allocation of responsibilities at local level. The proposals in this White Paper are aimed at ensuring that resources are managed in the interests of the nation as a whole, in a way that enhances efficiency and accountability."

Legislation

At the time of going to press, the Government's plans for legislation to give effect to the White Paper proposals have not been made known. Whilst there would be advantages to the industry in having these matters resolved, there is no cloud of uncertainty over the regions such as to give the water authorities pause in consolidating and improving the service. As Mr. Kinnersley rightly pointed out two years ago, the Government review was not the main focus of attention in the industry. There were then and are still plenty of matters to occupy the water authorities and some of those prophetically mentioned are still very much with us: the review of discharge consent standards and the publication of data about discharges under the Control of Pollution Act 1974: the quality of water supply amidst changing hazards and the impact of EEC regulations being among them. Apart from these which follow from the basic concept of the Water Act 1973 and other legislation, there are many more developments which water authorities feel able to concentrate on now that they have got into their stride. Some of those which are preoccupying my own authority are outlined in the following paragraph.

The View from Wessex

Planning has taken on a firmer look with the Government's requirements for a firm five year programme on capital works on which to base expenditure allocations. Wessex, in common with other water authorities, responded accordingly and in February this year the Wessex Plan 1978-83 was duly despatched to the Department of the Environment following wide consultation within the Authority and also with local authorities in the region. The Plan will be updated annually and will in future cover both the medium and long term situations fulfilling the obligation contained in Section 24 of the Act of 1973 for a twenty year plan.

Whilst the water resources of Wessex are substantial by comparison with present water demands, the growth of population both permanent and seasonal, together with increasing water use per head of population, make it necessary continually to assess the options available for the development of additional resources, and the maintenance of the quality of rivers and coastal waters. Peak demands are indeed a problem, and the Authority has had to take special steps to deal with the critical areas. The drought also gave an impetus to ways of preventing waste. It is a fact that a significant percentage of water despatched from source to consumer is lost en route through waste —seepage, cracks in pipes etc. Views on the scale of escaping water vary but it is generally agreed that this amounts to not less than 15% and in many areas it is much higher. The search for "unaccounted for" water is an obvious early resource option which might defer for a short period expenditure of tens of millions of pounds and the problem is therefore an urgent one. In Wessex telemetry is being harnessed to attack this and other problems in the first place on an experimental basis and no task is more important.

As in the case of other water authorities, Wessex is moving towards the direct billing of its customers. In the case of Wessex this is being done by stages and in the first place direct billing and collection will take place in areas where the Authority is responsible for all services and functions—the district councils concerned having relinquished their Section 15 agency arrangements in respect of sewerage.

The combined call for economy in manpower has highlighted the need for wise management and development of existing employees, with strong emphasis on a sound training programme. The water industry is fortunate in having excellent training facilities provided by the National Water Council and Wessex participates fully in this whilst at the same time providing facilities of its own at a training centre at Yeovil.

Research in all branches of the industry has never been more important and water authorities have welcomed the recent appointment of Mr. J. L. Van der Post as Director General of the Water Research Centre.

The Future

It will be gathered that so far as the writer is concerned, the future is viewed with optimism after a difficult formative period for both the water authority and local authorities in the region. Relations are now excellent and all concerned have settled down to the jobs in hand of which there are many. After the drought the snow and the floods, we are now threatened with a new Ice Age. All one can say that this in no way applies to the relations between the public authorities in this region.

WATER

ENGLAND AND WALES

The Water Act, 1973 produced a far-reaching reorganization of the water industry in England and Wales with the creation of nine water authorities in England and the Welsh National Water Development Authority to be responsible for the conservation, supply and distribution of water, land drainage, the prevention of pollution, sewerage and sewage treatment and water-based recreation and amenity. These regional water authorities are also responsible for sea defences protecting low-lying land, with district councils retaining a local government responsibility for coasts protected by higher ground. The whole hydrological cycle of conservation, distribution and reclamation is unified under the management of these ten autonomous, multi-purpose water authorities, with a National Water Council, on which sit the ten regional chairmen, to give co-ordination and leadership at national level.

The ten water authorites are:
Anglian Water Authority;
Northumbrian Water Authority;
North West Water Authority;
Severn-Trent Water Authority;
Southern Water Authority;
South West Water Authority;
Thames Water Authority;
Wessex Water Authority;
Yorkshire Water Authority;
Welsh Water Authority.

This structure replaced on 1st April 1974 the former 29 river authorities, 157 water undertakings and 1,393 sewerage authorities, but 28 statutory water companies remain to act as independent agents of the regional water authorities. The geographical areas of these regional water authorities are not based as hitherto on local government boundaries, but on river basins as natural water boundaries in England and Wales. The eastern boundary of the area of the Welsh National Water Development Authority does not coincide with the boundary between England and Wales in that parts of the areas of both the English Counties of Cheshire and of Hereford and Worcester are within the Development Authority's supply area and whereas parts of the area of the Welsh County of Powys are serviced by the Severn-Trent Water Authority. (See map with Regional Water Authorities in this section.)

SCOTLAND

Reorganization of local government in Scotland came into force on 16th May 1975 under the provisions of the local Government (Scotland) Act 1973. Section 148 of this Act dissolved the Regional Water Boards, established under the Water (Scotland) Act 1967, and transferred their functions to the new Regional or Islands Councils, twelve in number, created in the local government reorganization, as hereunder:
Borders Regional Council;
Central Regional Council;
Dumfries and Galloway Regional Council;
Fife Regional Council;

Grampian Regional Council;
Highland Regional Council;
Lothian Regional Council;
Strathclyde Regional Council;
Tayside Regional Council;
Western Isles Council;
Orkney Island Council;
Shetland Island Council.

There are two exceptions to the above, viz.:

(i) the whole of the former county of Kinross will come within the Regional Council of Fife.

(ii) that part of the former counties of Stirling and Dunbarton which lies within both the Strathclyde region and the region of the Mid Scotland Water Board will come within the Central Regional Council.

Also the Central Scotland Water Development Board remained in being as a bulk supply authority serving the Central Lothian Tayside and Strathclyde Regional Councils. The nine Regional Councils and the three Island Councils are described in detail in Section 37 devoted to Scotland and a map appears therein.

Thus reorganization of the water industry in Scotland led to the return to local authorities of responsibility for water supply a reverse move to the changes which took place in the industry in England and Wales a year earlier from 1st April, 1974. On the other hand, the river purification boards remained in Scotland, albeit in a new guise and in a reduced number, whilst their equivalent in England and Wales, the river authorities, were dissolved in the reorganization basin.

RIVER PURIFICATION BOARDS

Section 135 of the Local Government (Scotland) Act, 1973, established new river purification boards to take over the functions of the former river purification boards created under part II of the Rivers (Prevention of Pollution) (Scotland) Act 1951. The new boards set up by order of the Secretary of State are seven in number compared with nine former boards, and operated from 16th May 1975. They are responsible for areas known as "river purification board areas", but their boundaries do not uniformly compare with those of the nine regional local government areas on the mainland; the river purification functions in the Orkney and Shetland Islands and the Western Isles are the responsibility of the islands councils under the same Act of 1973. (See map with Scottish River Purification Boards in this Section).

As from 16th May 1975 the following seven boards are in being:

Clyde River Purification Board;
Forth River Purification Board;
Highland River Purification Board;
North East River Purification Board;
Solway River Purification Board;
Tay River Purification Board;
Tweed River Purification Board.

NORTHERN IRELAND

On 1st January 1974 the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland assumed responsibilities for functions of the former Ministry of Development. In the reorganization of local government and the establishment of new district councils there on 1st October 1973, the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland took over inter alia, direct responsibility for the provision of water supplies and sewerage as opposed to the duties of the former Ministry of Development being limited to the long-term development of water resources.

These two services are now administered by the Department through four Water Services Divisions—Northern Southern Eastern and Western—with sub-divisions for water supply and sewerage. Previously water supply had been the responsibility of a number of water undertakings managed by specific water authorities, by some former borough councils, and by a number of urban and rural district councils.

WATER SPACE AMENITY COMMISSION

1 Queen Anne's Gate, London, SW1H 9BT (01-930 3100)

The Water Space Amenity Commission was established under the Water Act, 1973 on 1st April 1974. It is important to realize that the Commission is not just another name in the mass of national bodies. It is, in fact, an integral part of the great new Water Industry. Not only does the Chairman sit on the National Water Council with the Chairmen of the regional water authorities, but those Chairmen are themselves members of the Commission. Inevitably, therefore, the thinking and planning of the Commission is water-orientated from the outset and consequently brings a fresh approach to all the problems of water-orientated leisure. Because the other major bodies in this field, such as the Sports Council, the Countryside Commission, the English Tourist Board and the County Councils' Association all have a voice on the Commission, it has created a forum for the water industry and the other recreational organizations to exchange their views and discuss their problems.

This new approach to all forms of water recreation is made much more important because both the prime responsibility and the statutory obligation for providing recreation and amenity on waters, which are under the control of the water authorities, fall on the industry itself.

The setting up of the Commission clearly shows that the water industry has accepted this challenge and will solve its problems in its own way, although at the same time working in harmony with local authorities, national bodies and user organizations.

On the management side, the Commission is very anxious to try and prevent the restrictions on waters for exclusive club use. In the past, there has been a tendency in many cases to let off areas of water to clubs or individuals on annual tenancies or long leases.

Recreational management is also going to become of greater significance in the water industry and training schemes for the development of management techniques are available at various levels throughout the country.

INSTITUTE OF WATER POLLUTION CONTROL

Ledson Hse., 53 London Rd., Maidstone, Kent, ME16 8JH (0622 62034).

The work and aims of the Institute of Water Pollution Control are concerned with promoting the advancement of the sciences and practices of the treatment of all waste waters, domestic and industrial, and of the prevention of water pollution. In consequence the risk of contaminating rivers and other sources of water supply is reduced to a minimum and the navigational, fishing, industrial and recreational value of rivers and watercourses are preserved and improved so protecting the health of the public, improving the general amenities of urban and rural life, and serving industry by reducing the cost and inconvenience of inadequate or polluted water resources.

For more than 75 years the activities of the Institute have been devoted exclusively to this work and the Institute has gained international recognition for its achievements in the field.

The work of the Institute began at the turn of the century (1901) when the Association of Managers of Sewage Disposal Works was formed. In 1932 the Association was incorporated as the Institute of Sewage Purification and in 1966 it was re-named the Institute of Water Pollution Control. These changes have resulted from an awareness in the Institute of the problems of the future and of the need for a vigorous and continuing policy of adjustment to meet these problems. In this way the Institute has become pre-eminent throughout the world in this essentially specialized field of environmental health.

The management of the affairs of the Institute and its policies are controlled by the Council of the Institute composed of representatives from all the Branches together with the principal officers of the Institute. The business of the Council is conducted through a number of Standing Committees, assisted by sub-committees, whose terms of reference cover the whole field of water pollution control.

General Secretary: Frank Stephens.

President 1978-79: G. A. Truesdale, BSc, FIPHE, FIWPC, MIWES.

with CRIMP & BRUGES

This is an essential reference book for all engineers and surveyors. It was first published in 1897, and reprinted as a metric edition in 1969.

These well-known Tables and Diagrams for use in designing sewers and water mains have familiar imperial tables facing their equivalent in the metric form. A table of proportional values for 'new form' egg-shaped sewers has been added, also the percentages which must be subtracted to obtain values for these sewers from figures calculated for 'old form' egg-shaped sewers.

Principal Officers: D. E. K. Boyd and J. E. Irwin.

GENERAL

The Water Service of the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland became the sole water and sewerage authority for Northern Ireland on 1 October 1973 as part of the general reorganisation of local government. Prior to 1973 79 local authorities and joint water and sewerage boards had statutory responsibility for water and sewerage services.

The Water Service operates under a divisional structure centred in Belfast, Ballymena, Craigavon and Londonderry with local Water Service offices in most of the provincial towns. A Headquarters Unit at Stormont, Belfast is responsible for policy, co-ordination, finance, Engineer Planning and Capital Programme Control.

Over 90% of the 1½ million population have a piped water supply and about 85% have modern sanitation facilities. Since reorganization there has been a continuous effort to improve the water system. Particular emphasis has been placed on:

(a) the improvement of water quality by new methods of treatment and the provision of covered service reservoirs;
(b) the principle of interchangeability in order that surplus supplies may be diverted from one area to another where a shortage exists;
(c) the insurance of continuity of supply by duplicating trunk mains from service reservoirs and treatment plants to networks;
(d) greater efficiency in detection and prevention of waste and the improvement of standards of maintenance and repair of existing installations.

Intensive efforts have been made also in the field of sewage disposal to improve existing installations and to provide new works to reduce the level of pollution in inland and coastal waters and to cater for expanding development.

INTERNATIONAL UNION OF LOCAL AUTHORITIES

President: Tom Moody.

Secretary-General: J. G. Van Putten

Headquarters: 45 Wassenaarseweg, The Hague 2018, Netherlands

Founded in 1913 at the first Congress of Towns, held in Ghent, the International Union of Local Authorities commenced regular activities in Brussels after World War I. Following World War II the Secretariat was moved to The Hague.

The purpose of IULA is to act as a spokesman for local government on the international level; serve as a forum for the exchange of views and the formulation of local government policies; provide services such as organizing training courses, seminars and congresses on topics of current interest to local authorities, answer inquiries for documentation, reference material and international contacts, publish reports of IULA-organized meetings and research, provide a centre for the collection and dissemination of information on local government; and promote the participation of citizens in civic affairs. Its membership is composed of national local government associations; individual local authorities; higher authorities concerned with local government affairs; institutes of public administration, training institutions, municipal credit institutions and other corporate bodies interested in local government and individuals.

IULA is governed by a General Council, on which Great Britain has 10 seats, which meets every two years; and by an Executive Committee, on which Great Britain has one permanent seat. There are also specialist committees on which Great Britain is represented, dealing with such matters as European affairs, wholesale markets (the President of the Council of Wholesale Markets is the General Manager of the Covent Garden Market Authority), technical services to local authorities and town affiliations. These committees have undertaken useful studies, often in co-operation with specialist United Nations agencies, into such subjects as adult education and sport, the fluoridation of drinking water, air pollution, refuse disposal, grain storage, the efficient operation of wholesale markets, and land policy.

IULA has been granted consultative status by the Economic and Social Council of the UN, UNESCO, UNICEF, WHO and the Council of Europe. Representatives of these bodies regularly attend the meetings of IULA and contribute to the work of its specialist committees. The British Section is represented at the European Conference of Local Authorities which operates within the Council of Europe.

IULA now has members in some 63 countries and makes a special effort to promote the idea and practice of local government in developing countries by means of eight-week courses for senior central or local government officials from these countries. It has been possible for many of the courses to visit local authorities in Great Britain for this purpose; the arrangements being made by the British Section of IULA with the assistance of the local authority associations and the co-operation and generous hospitality given by the local authorities. The British Government—through the Ministry of Overseas Development also assist by means of a small grant and some hospitality. In addition, the training programme includes the holding of regional seminars in developing countries. These seminars, on topics such as municipal finance or the role of local authorities in development planning, have been held in Guyana, Kenya, Malaysia, Nigeria, and further ones are planned for Iran, Brazil, Zambia and elsewhere.

IULA holds an international congress of local authorities every two years with alternate meetings generally taking place outside Europe—in 1975 in Teheran-Iran and in 1977 at Hamburg where the subject was "Improving the quality of life—A challenge to Local Authorities".

Holding congresses is not the only way in which IULA helps with the exchange of information. It publishes a monthly "Newsletter" in English, French and German versions and a bi-annual journal. A listing of recent acquisitions of the jointly operated libraries of IULA and IFHP, "Bibliographia", is issued every two months. In addition to this the library compiles bibliographical lists of literature available on loan and answers telephone and written requests for information on many subjects, such as local government finance, low-cost housing, decision-making, water treatment, urban renewal and new town development.

IULA often undertakes research at the request of members and under contract with international organizations. A preliminary study on "Decision-making in the Future" was completed for the European Cultural Foundation as part of Project 3 of Plan Europe 2,000, and a paper on "Regulatory and Development Administration for Environmental Purposes at the Urban Level" was submitted at the request of the Public Administration Division of the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs. Staff members are regular contributors on the subject of urban affairs to two international encyclopaedias and are called upon to submit papers to United Nations agencies and various international seminars and meetings. IULA will be playing a leading role in the contributions of non-governmental organizations to the Conference/Exhibition on Human Settlements which is to take place in Vancouver in 1976, following leadership in this capacity at the Stockholm Conference on the Human Environment in 1972.

The reports presented to the Congresses, reports of seminars and conferences and all other IULA publications can be obtained from the British Section of IULA, 36 Old Queen Street, London, SW1H 9JE.

BRITISH SECTION

President: The Lord Pargiter, CBE.

Chairman—Executive Committee: Sir Meredith Whittaker.

Secretariat: 36 Old Queen St., London, SW1H 9JE. Tel. 01-222 1636.

The British Section, a member of the International Union, was founded in 1926. All principal local authorities in the United Kingdom have membership in the British Section of IULA through their National Associations, and membership is also open to societies connected with local government.

Because of local government reorganization in England and Wales which came into effect on 1st April, 1974, and in Scotland on 1st April, 1975, a new Constitution has been drawn up for British Section IULA, which is now under the joint control of the local authority Associations. The new Secretariat is:—Joint Secretaries: A. C. Hetherington, CBE, T. H. Caulcott, S. Rhodes, OBE; Assistant Secretary: P. N. Bongers; Administrative Officer: Miss V. Whiteley.

The Section holds a National Conference every two years alternating with the International Congress. The Conference discusses the subject to be considered at the International Congress the following year. Papers are prepared by experts for the Conference and these form the basis of the British report to the International Congress.

The last British Conference being the Golden Jubilee was held in London in October 1976.

All members regularly receive information on the municipal affairs of other member nations through "The Monthly Newsletter", and also from the British Section's publication entitled "Local Government Abroad". Enquiries about local government practice abroad can be addressed to the Secretariat of the British Section, 36 Old Queen Street, London, SW1H 9JE and if the information is not available either there or at The Hague, a special enquiry in one or more countries can be undertaken. Similarly, many enquiries are addressed to Great Britain from The Hague.

Much interest is taken by the British Section in the formation of civic links between towns abroad and those in Great Britain. The co-ordination of arrangements for putting towns with similar geographical, historical or industrial interests in touch with each other has been undertaken by the Joint Twinning Committee, which was formed by the four main associations of local authorities, and on which the British Section is represented. The work in connection with this Committee has now been undertaken by the British Council whose secretary is Mrs. D. Paynton.

IULA brings to its members the positive benefits of regular information about systems of local governments and new ideas and experiments being tried in all parts of the world. In particular, it is able to help the developing countries now introducing new systems of local government; and the British Section, which has behind it the great wealth of experience of British local government, is playing a leading and increasing part in the affairs of the Union. But beyond this, the great value of IULA is its work in strengthening local self-government, in developing democratic institutions, and in bringing together the people responsible for local administration in all parts of the world. It is a vital force for the peace of the world and its work was never more urgent.

COUNCIL OF EUROPEAN MUNICIPALITIES

President: John Hay.

British Section: Chairman: Sir Meredith Whittaker.

Joint Secretaries: A. C. Hetherington, CBE, (Secretary-General), T. H. Caulcott, S. Rhodes, OBE, G. H. Speirs.

International Secretariat: Secretary-General: Thomas Philippovich, 89 boulevard Niel, 75017 Paris, France.

CEM was formed in 1951 and now has national sections in fourteen of the member countries of the Council of Europe. Its objects are to achieve and defend municipal autonomy; to facilitate municipal administration, ensure freedom of municipal action and contribute to its prosperity; to develop a European outlook within local and regional authorities with a view to promoting a Federation of European states based on municipal autonomy of these authorities; to ensure the participation and representation of local and regional authorities in European international organizations; to seek provision for a representative assembly of local and regional authorities in the future European institutions.

CEM is directed by an international Committee of Presidents and holds a biennial Assembly of European Municipalities (1970 in London, 1972 in Nice, 1975 in Vienna) and also smaller representative meetings on political and technical subjects of interest to local authorities. It has consultative status with the Council of Europe and plays an active part in the affairs of the conference of Local and Regional Authorities of Europe.

By an agreement concluded with the International Union of Local Authorities in May 1971, CEM and IULA are pledged to the progressive co ordination of their activities at the European level. Within this framework they are jointly responsible for the Local Government Liaison Office with the European Communities in Brussels, which has been set up to provide an information service to the local authority Associations on Community activities likely to be of relevance to local government.

The British Section of CEM has recently been reconstituted with the support of the UK local authority associations and its secretariat is provided jointly with that of the British Section of IULA. Local authority membership is provided for through the associations, but in addition individual membership is open to members and officers of local authorities and persons connected with local government. The Executive Committee of the British Section consists of seven representatives nominated by the local authority associations and six members drawn from among the individual members of the Section.

Take a load off your mind

If problems in potable water, sewage, industrial effluents, or drainage systems are weighing you down, pipe up and unburden yourself on us. For years, systems constructed from Hostalen GM 5010 high density polyethylene pipes have been solving problems all over the world.

And now we've gone one better: Hostalen GM 5010 T2, the new grade with even better characteristics.

Our watertight solution means the pressure's off. Because Hostalen's straightforward jointing methods ensure leakproof systems under the most difficult conditions. Pipes in Hostalen GM 5010 T2 are flexible, corrosion free, and low in weight. Ease of transport and handling cuts labour costs compared to more traditional pipe materials.

Hostalen pipe diameters available range from 16mm to 1600mm.
So take a load off your mind with Hostalen GM 5010 T2 lightweight pipes. They're in the heavyweight class.

Chairman of the Council: J. E. Mortimer.
Secretary: D. Richardson.
Chief Conciliation Officer: A. S. Kerr, CBE.

The Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service (ACAS) was set up on January 1, 1976 under the Employment Protection Act 1975 as an independent statutory body.

The service provides facilities for conciliation, mediation and arbitration as a means of avoiding and resolving industrial disputes; provides advisory services to industry on industrial relations matters; undertakes inquiries aimed at promoting the improvement and extension of collective bargaining; and in certain circumstances offers conciliation between individuals and their employers.

The service is run by a Council consisting of a chairman and nine members. Three of the members are nominated by the TUC, three by the CBI, and three are independent.

In all its work, ACAS recognises that direct responsibility for the conduct of industrial relations rests with employers and employees and their representatives.

The Development Commission is a body of eight Commissioners appointed by Royal Warrant whose statutory duty is to consider and to report to the Department of the Environment upon all applications for advances from the Development Fund The Development Fund was established by the Development and Road Improvement Funds Acts 1909 and 1910. The scope of the Fund has been considerably altered over the years but broadly any scheme which may be calculated to benefit the rural economy of England may be eligible for assistance from the Fund provided that no other statutory provision for helping it exists. At present the main types of activity assisted are:

(1) the provision of factory premises of various kinds in rural areas where diversity of or increased employment is needed to prevent or check depopulation or to meet other problems;

(2) the continued development of advice, instruction and credit services for small manufacturing and servicing industries in rural areas and a limited scheme of loans for assistance to tourism enterprises in the rural parts of Development Areas of England. This work is carried out through the Council for Small Industries in Rural Areas;

(3) assisting voluntary bodies who provide in the countryside various services designed to create opportunities for a richer social or intellectual life for country people;

(4) work which is of interest to several Government departments but which no particular department has powers to assist;

(5) financing marketing and co-operative schemes which can strengthen the economy of agricultural or fishing communities;

(6) assisting and sponsoring social and economic surveys in rural areas.

The Commission has a special interest in the depopulating rural areas. It is entering into a new phase in its work and is planning to tackle the problems of the regeneration of those areas by a more integrated and comprehensive approach in which all aspects of the needs of an area will be considered The Commission works in close partnership with the local authorities and others in selected areas in this work

(ii) the Special Temporary Employment Programme (STEP) which will provide temporary employment for up to 25,000 longer term unemployed adults (ie over 19).

Area Offices

Area offices of MSC's Special Programmes Division are at Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Carlisle (sub-office), Coventry, Dumfries, Dundee, Edinburgh, Exeter, Glasgow, High Wycombe, Horsham, Hull, Inverness (sub-office), Ipswich, Leeds, Liverpool, London, Manchester, Middlesbrough, Nottingham, Sheffield, Southampton, Sunderland, Swansea, Wolverhampton, Wrexham. Addresses and telephone numbers may be obtained from MSC regional offices and from the offices for Scotland and Wales.

EMPLOYMENT SERVICE DIVISION

The Manpower Services Commission, through its Employment Service Division, runs:

(i) Jobcentres and Employment Offices. Jobcentres are replacing the old style employment exchanges. They differ from employment exchanges in their siting, design and overall presentation of premises and their specially trained staffs. They offer self-service facilities for job seekers and expert advice on employment problems for both employers and work people. It is expected that by the middle of 1979 more than 500 of these offices will have been opened.

(ii) Professional and Executive Register (PER) which is responsible for assisting employers to find a wide range of technical and managerial staff. PER's consultants operate from a network of over 30 offices and provide a highly sophisticated commercially based selection and advertizing service.

(iii) the Occupational Guidance Service. This is provided in 49 centres in Britain but is available through almost all Jobcentres and Employment Offices. It is open to people who are choosing or thinking about a change of occupation and feel they would benefit from expert advice.

(iv) schemes to help workers to move to new jobs in areas away from their homes.

(v) employment resettlement services for disabled people and 27 Employment Rehabilitation Centres (ERCs) which provide a range of courses designed to prepare people, both disabled and able-bodied, for employment and to assess their capacity and suitability for work or training.

(vi) the Employment Service Division is also responsible for the administration of the Quota and the Designated Employments schemes under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 and for the provision of Sheltered Employment.

(vii) a Careers and Occupational Information Centre (COIC), which provides materials to help those who wish to enter or change careers make informed decisions. A number of experimental job libraries (providing access to careers information for adults and young people) have been opened since the spring of 1978.

This Scheme came into operation in August 1972 and provides training to meet the needs of individuals in Skillcentres (previously called Government Training Centres) colleges of further education, employers establishments, other independent organizations and where appropriate universities. The Tops Scheme which now offers courses in over 700 subjects trained 94,162 people in 1977 and the objective for 1978/79 is 109,162. In 1977/78 Tops had an annual budget of over £300 million. There are at present 66 Skillcentres and 33 Skillcentre Annexes in Britain offering courses in over 70 occupational skills. Provision has already been made for the building of 13 additional centres/Annexes to become operational between now and 1981:

(iii) co-ordinates the work of Industrial Training Boards. The Boards were set up in the mid 1960s and have the authority and responsibility to promote adequate training in their industries. There are 23 boards covering industries with 12 million workers. Since April 1975 the Training Services Division has been paying the operational expenses of the Boards and has provided funds for certain key training activities. Levies are normally limited to one per cent of an employers payroll and there is exemption for small firms and firms with adequate training arrangements:

(iv) in conjunction with the industrial training boards, has implemented plans to reduce the effects of recession and high unemployment on training. The plans concentrate on offsetting shortfalls in intakes to training primarily by grants for long term training and by expanding TOPS courses for school leavers and provision for adults.

ENVIRONMENT, DEPARTMENT OF THE Planning

The Department is responsible for the system of Town and Country Planning in England. The main statute is the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 (which consolidated previous legislation) as amended by the Town and Country Planning (Amendment) Act 1972. It has been further amended by the Local Government Act 1972, which allocated planning functions between County and District planning authorities (its chief provisions became operative on 1 April 1974), and by The Local Government Act 1974. The 1971 Act (as amended) provides for a new development plan system which is being introduced progressively. The new system consists of two main elements: the structure plan, prepared by the county planning authority, setting out the main strategic planning policies and the most important proposals for change, which requires the approval of the Secretary of State; and local plans, usually prepared by district planning authorities setting out appropriately detailed proposals, which are subject to certification by the county, normally are adopted by the authorities themselves following certain statutory procedures for considering objections. The districts are also responsible for most development control decisions although the counties have important powers relating to certain county matters and strategic and highway considerations. The Secretary of State determines, or appoints inspectors to determine, appeals from applicants aggrieved by decisions of local planning authorities on applications for planning permission.

The Department is responsible also for the community land scheme. The Community Land Act 1975 gives local authorities a new role in supplying land for private development, and wider powers of land acquisition. Authorities' programmes of acquisition and disposal require the approval of the Secretary of State, whose functions include also the consideration of compulsory purchase orders and the giving of consent to disposals of land.

The Secretary of State also has responsibilities in connection with the Countryside Commission under the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949 and the Countryside Act 1968 and makes orders and gives consents under the various enactments relating to allotments, commons, exchange of lands, apportionment and redemption of rents, and glebe land. His functions also include the approval of schemes for the clearance of derelict land and the payment of grants to local authorities.

Under the New Towns Act 1965 (which consolidated previous legislation) the Secretary of State is responsible for designating land and for appointing and controlling development corporations for the purpose of building new towns. The Act of 1965 also provides for development corporations to be wound up and their assets and liabilities transferred to the Commission for the New Towns when the Minister is satisfied that the purposes for which the corporations were created have been substantially achieved

The New Towns (Amendment) Act 1976 provides for the transfer to district councils of the ownership of rented dwellings and related assets held by development corporations and the Commission for the New Towns.

The Town Development Act 1952 complements the New Towns Act 1965 It enables existing towns to expand to take people and industry from congested and over populated areas Exchequer grants are payable towards some of the expenditure incurred.

Environmental Protection

Under the Water Act 1973, the Secretary of State is responsible for promoting a national policy for water and for securing the effective execution of this policy. He is advised by the National Water Council. The nine Regional Water Authorities set up in England (and the Welsh National Water Development Authority) are each responsible for all aspects of the water cycle within their own areas. The Secretary of State is responsible for appointing some members of each English authority. He has powers of direction of a general nature and particular powers with regard to charging schemes and other financial matters. He has to approve the programme of each Regional Water Authority.

The Department is responsible for policies relating to noise, clean air, and the disposal of wastes.

It co-ordinates central government functions on pollution control and the United Kingdom contribution to international activities in this field.

Housing

The Secretary of State is responsible for housing policy in England and related legislation. His functions include the administration of subsidies under the Housing Rents and Subsidies Act; the consideration of compulsory purchase orders and clearance orders under the Housing Acts; the issue of consents to borrowing by local authorities for the purposes of the Housing Acts and the Small Dwellings Acquisition Acts and the payment of Exchequer contributions authorized by the Housing Acts.

ECONOMIC COUNCILS AND BOARDS—See Section 27

LOCAL GOVERNMENT AUDIT

Local authorities spend large sums of money, derived mainly from rates and taxes and external audit has an important part to play in the maintenance of public confidence in these bodies. Part VIII of the Local Government Act 1972 contains the external audit provisions in relation to local authorities in England and Wales.

The Act provides for a choice between the district auditor and an "approved" auditor and the 456 new principal authorities have exercised their choice as follows:

424 for district audit
21 for approved audit and
11 shared.

An approved auditor must be a member of one of the principal accountancy bodies and his appointment must be approved by the Secretary of State for the Environment.

District auditors are appointed by the Secretary of State for the Environment but they are independent officers and are not subject to his direction or control England and Wales are divided for audit purposes into a number of audit districts each with a district auditor; a list of their names, addresses and telephone numbers appears below.

In carrying out their audits, district auditors have quasi judicial powers to deal with matters of illegality, misconduct or failure to bring money to account. If a district auditor considers that an item of account is contrary to law, he may apply to the courts for a declaration to that effect. The court may make, or refuse such a declaration, and if it makes a declaration, order the accounts to be rectified, and, if relevant, order those responsible for incurring or authorizing such expenditure to repay it. Where the amount involved exceeds £2,000 and the person responsible is a member of a local authority, the court may also order disqualification from membership. Where it appears to a district auditor that there has been a failure to account or that loss has been incurred through wilful misconduct, he certifies the sum to be due from the person responsible Disqualification ensues in cases of wilful misconduct where the amount exceeds £2,000 District auditors are also required to hear any objections made by local government electors to items in the accounts.

Where circumstances arise on accounts audited by an approved auditor which require the exercise of the above powers they are brought into operation by the Secretary of State directing a district auditor to hold an extraordinary audit.

The audit procedure provides for certain formalities to be observed: e.g.

1. deposit of accounts and vouchers to enable interested persons to inspect and copy any of the documents deposited.
2. notice by advertisement in the local press by the local authority of the time and place of holding the audit and where the accounts etc., may be inspected.

During the audit any elector may question the auditor about the accounts and the auditor may demand the production of documents relating to the accounts.

ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON LOCAL GOVERNMENT AUDIT

The Secretary of State for the Environment and the Secretary of State for Wales announced, in May 1978, the setting up of an advisory committee on local government audit with the following terms of reference:

i. To consider the annual report of the Chief Inspector of Audit and any questions arising from it which are of general public interest or concern, whether in the field of value for money or otherwise; and to make general recommendations to local authorities and to central government as it thinks fit; and

ii. to invite information and submissions on comparative and other value for money studies from local authorities and their associations and from other agencies concerned; and in the light of this and other information to advise on the need for such studies and arrangements for carrying them out.

The Committee consists of an independent chairman, three independent members and five members nominated by the local authority associations and the GLC. It is envisaged that the Comptroller and Auditor General will normally participate in the meetings, although statutorily he cannot be appointed a member of such a Committee.

The Committee reports to the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The Department of Health and Social Security administers the scheme of Social Security benefits, Industrial Injuries, Child benefits and War pensions. Within the Department is the Supplementary Benefits Commission which is responsible for guiding the scheme of supplementary benefits and determining awards (see below).

The Department of Health and Social Security is responsible for the award and payment of war pensions and for the administration of the unified scheme of social insurance provided by the Social Security Acts.

The Child Benefit Act also administered by the Department provides a weekly tax free cash allowance which is payable for all children under the age limits of the scheme.

Generally speaking arrangements for National insurance contributions cover everyone who is aged 16 or over and under pension age. Contributions are payable by: employed earners, persons who are gainfully employed under a contract of service or apprenticeship, or are office-holders;, self-employed earners, persons who are gainfully employed but are not working under the control of an employer; non-employed persons who may pay voluntary contribution for a limited range of benefits. The right of a married woman and certain widows to make a fresh choice of reduced contribution liability has been abolished; but a woman who already has the right to pay at the reduced rate may continue to do so subject to certain conditions.

The scheme is financed by contributions by individuals, employers and the Exchequer. The rate of contributions payable and the benefits obtainable by a contributor depend on his category. In April 1978 the Government introduced an additional pension scheme under which earnings-related pensions start to become payable from April 1979. The percentage national insurance contribution that is paid depends on whether or not the employee is contracted-out, as a member of his employer's occupational scheme. Non-employed persons have insurance cover for basic retirement pension, widow's benefits, guardians' allowance, certain maternity benefits and death grant. Self employed and employed earners are similarly covered but the former can also qualify for sickness and maternity benefit the latter for sickness unemployment and maternity benefits with supplements.

Employed earners are also insured against disablement or death caused by an accident or disease arising out of their employment.

A non-contributory invalidity pension is payable, subject to certain qualifying conditions, to persons of working age who are incapable of work (and, if a married woman, of housework) but who have not paid sufficient contributions to qualify for the ordinary (contributory) sickness and invalidity benefits.

Attendance Allowance is payable for adults or children who are so severely disabled that they require a lot of attention or supervision by day or at night Generally speaking, it is not payable for people in NHS hospitals, or certain other accommodation where a contribution towards the cost is made out of public funds.

Invalid care allowance is a non contributory benefit payable to men and single women under pensionable age who are unable to work because they are needed at home to care for a severely disabled relative who is receiving Attendance Allowance.

The Department maintains a network of about 600 Local Offices throughout Great Britain where claims to benefit should be made and advice can be obtained. Copies of leaflets dealing with various aspects of the Department's work can be obtained at local Social Security Offices, free of charge.

SUPPLEMENTARY BENEFITS

People in Great Britain aged 16 or over not in full-time work, attending school or involved in a trade dispute and whose resources are insufficient to meet their requirements may be entitled to supplementary benefit. There is a supplementary pension for those over the minimum retirement age 65 for men 60 for women and a supplementary allowance for others. The benefit payable is the amount by which a person's requirements exceed his available resources as defined in the Supplementary Benefits Act 1976. In general the calculation of requirements is based on different amounts for single people and family groups (for blind people there are special higher amounts) and an addition for rent. For the elderly and most other long-term cases higher scale rates are payable.

Family Income Supplement is payable to families with at least one dependent child where the head of the family is in full-time paid work and the family's gross income is less than a prescribed amount.

The Supplementary Benefits Commission are responsible for investigation into the resources of applicants for legal aid. The Commission run re-establishment centres, provide temporary board and lodgings at reception centres for "persons without a settled way of living", and make grants to voluntary organisations which maintain centres for similar purposes. Under the Polish Resettlement Act 1947 the commission provide accommodation for certain Poles and others associated with the wartime Polish forces.

LAND REGISTRY, HM

Headquarters Office: Lincoln's Inn Fields, London, WC2A 3PH (01-405 3488).

The registration of title to land was first introduced in England and Wales by the Land Registry Act 1862. Many changes have been made to the original system by subsequent legislation and HM Land Registry operates today under the Land Registration Acts 1925 to 1971. The object of registering title to land is for dealings with it to be made more safe, simple and therefore economical. This is achieved by maintaining a register of land owners whose title is guaranteed by the State and by providing simple forms enabling them to transfer, mortgage and otherwise deal with their registered titles. This simplification should keep the cost of dealing with registered land at a lower level than that for unregistered land. It is more economic to have specified areas of the country where registration of title is compulsory on sale and having first registration take place in those areas alone. Under the Land Registration Act 1966, the voluntary first registration of land in non compulsory areas was severely curtailed in order to facilitate an accelerated extension of the compulsory system and the intention is that registration of title shall ultimately be universal throughout England and Wales. Over the years, voluntary registration in the non compulsory areas has been common and it is still possible to register building estates, upon certain conditions, in any part of England or Wales.

HM Land Registry is administered under the Lord Chancellor by the Chief Land Registrar and the work is decentralized to a number of regional offices as specified below. The Chief Land Registrar is also responsible for the Land Charges Register under the Land Charges Act 1925 and for the Agricultural Credits Register under the Agricultural Credits Act 1928.

AREAS SERVED BY THE DISTRICT REGISTRIES OF H.M. LAND REGISTRY as on 1 February 1978

Owing to the numerous boundary changes that have occurred between the time when some Orders were made and the re-organization under the provisions of the London Government Act 1963 and the Local Government Act 1972, it is not always practicable to rely upon names of the districts or London Boroughs given below as having always applied to the area in question. It is emphasized that applications of all kinds, whether for the first registration, dealings with registered land, office copies, official searches, or otherwise, will only be effectively delivered when they are received at the proper office. If a single application relates to land within more than one of the areas, then it will be effectively delivered if it is sent to the proper office in respect of the location of any one property comprised in the application. The headquarters office of the Land Registry at Lincoln's Inn Fields, London WC2A 3PH, is not the proper office for land registration work in any area of the country and it is regretted that applications cannot be accepted there.

The Chief Land Registrar is, however, willing for the time being to allow personal searches of the registers and index maps held at one district land registry to be made at any of the other district land registries, on the applicant giving not less than four days notice of his desire to do so at the office where inspection is sought.

NATURAL ENVIRONMENT RESEARCH COUNCIL

Alhambra Hse., 27–33 Charing Cross Rd, London, WC2H 0AX (01-930 9232).

The Natural Environment Research Council was established by Royal Charter on 1st June 1965, under the Science and Technology Act of 1965. The task of the Council is to encourage, plan and execute research in those sciences, physical, geological and biological, that relate to man's natural environment and its resources. Such investigations seek to provide a better understanding not only of the nature and processes of the environment in which we live and on whose resources we depend, but also of their influence on man's activities and welfare and, of growing importance today, of man's influence on them.

The natural environmental sciences supported by the Council include geology, geophysics and geochemistry; physical oceanography, marine biology and fisheries; hydrology, freshwater biology and fisheries; terrestrial ecology; forestry; and atmospheric sciences.

The Council supports the environmental sciences in the universities and other establishments of higher education by awarding post-graduate training awards, research grants and fellowships.

The Council is financed by Grant-in-Aid from Parliament, received through the Department of Education and Science and by commissioned research from Government Departments and other agencies.

POPULATION CENSUSES AND SURVEYS, OFFICE OF

National Health Service Central Register, Smedley Hydro, Birkdale, Southport, Lancs., PR8 2HH (0704 69824).

Statistical and Census Office, Segensworth Road, Titchfield, Fareham, Hants. (032-94 42511).

The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys was created by the merger in May 1970 of the General Register Office and the Government Social Survey Department.

The first Registrar General was appointed in 1836, and the General Register Office was established in 1837 when a comprehensive system of civil registration of births, marriages and deaths was instituted.

The Registrar General controls the local registration service in England and Wales in the exercise of its registration and marriage duties in accordance with the Births and Deaths Registration Act 1953, the Registration Service Act 1953, the Marriage Acts 1949 to 1970, the Children Act 1975 and other relevant enactments.

Copies of the original registrations of births, still-births, marriages and deaths are kept in London. A register of adopted children is held at Titchfield. Central indexes are compiled quarterly and certified copies of entries may be obtained on payment of certain fees. Extensive use of the records is made by other Government Departments, for the verification of ages and other particulars, e.g. in connection with pensions and national insurance.

Since 1841 the Registrar General has been responsible for taking the census of population. He also prepares and publishes a wide range of statistics and appropriate commentary relating to population, fertility, births, still-births, marriages, deaths and cause of death, infectious diseases, sickness and injuries.

The Registrar General also maintains at Southport a central register of persons on doctors' lists, for the purposes of the National Health Service.

The Social Survey Division carries out survey research studies on behalf of Government departments concerned with social and economic problems. These are of two kinds: (a) continuing studies designed to provide serial statistical data for those concerns of Government which require them and (b) ad hoc studies designed to meet particular policy needs.

The Board's primary role is to advise the Secretary of State for Wales on the exercise of his powers under Section 7 of the Industry Act 1972; in particular it gives advice on the commercial viability prospects of projects for which financial assistance is sought under this Section of the Act.

DEVELOPMENT BOARD FOR RURAL WALES

Members. Emrys Roberts, CBE (Chairman), B. R. Cook, MBE, W. G. Davies, MBE; I. Prys Edwards; W. Emrys Evans; F. Leslie Morgan, MBE; Lodwick Lloyd; D. Elystan Morgan; J. O. Morris; S. G. Pritchard; G. Rees; J. E. Tudor; H. J. B. Watkins, OBE.

Officers: W. Iain Skewis (Chief Executive); D. P. Garbett-Edwards (Development Director); H. R. Evans (Marketing Director); J. E. Hughes (Secretary).

The Development Board for Rural Wales was established by the Secretary of State for Wales under the Development of Rural Wales Act 1976. The Board brings together under one body a number of functions hitherto exercised by separate organizations. Its general task is to prepare and carry out measures for the economic and social development of Mid Wales, namely the five Districts of Brecknock, Montgomery and Radnor (all in Powys), Ceredigion in Dyfed and Meirionnydd in Gwynedd. The area may later be extended or restricted, after consultations.

The Board's area is large 3 238 square miles from Blaenau Ffestiniog in the North to Ystradgynlais in the South and from the English Borders of Powys in the East to the West Coast from Penrhyndeudraeth to Cardigan. It is 40 per cent of the area of Wales.

The population of 190 000 is scattered over this area of 3,238 square miles, its population is only 7 per cent of Wales It sustained heavy depopulation throughout this century, although since 1971 there has been a measure of stabilization Sixty per cent of the population live in isolated farms and small hamlets. Only ten towns exceed 3,000 population.

The primary aim of the Board will be to counter depopulation and encourage repopulation by both economic and social measures The development of Newtown will be taken over from the Mid Wales Development Corporation. Attention will be given to the other designated "growth towns" of Aberystwyth, Bala Brecon, Llandrindod Wells, Rhayader and Welshpool but the Board hope to be able to react to enterprise and to offer assistance to projects throughout its area.

Within Mid Wales, the Board will be the focal point and main instrument for both economic and social development It does not of course infringe on the local authorities' own powers. Consultation with the elected bodies the three County Councils and five District Councils is essential and will be continuous. Six Members of the Board are also local Councillors.

SECTION 32

COUNTY COUNCILS IN ENGLAND AND WALES

COUNTY COUNCILS

The Local Government Act 1972 abolished from 1st April, 1974 the 45 and 13 county councils in England and Wales respectively and created:

6 Metropolitan County Councils 39 Non-Metropolitan County Councils	in England
8 Non-Metropolitan County Councils	in Wales

The metropolitan county councils of Greater Manchester, Merseyside, South Yorkshire, Tyne and Wear, West Midlands and West Yorkshire are centred on densely populated areas and bear a resemblance to the Greater London Council.

The boundaries of many of the non-metropolitan counties in England are virtually the same as those of the counties they replace but the following major changes are effected by the creation of new counties:

Avon—consisting of the City of Bristol and parts of the counties of Somerset and Gloucestershire.

Cambridgeshire—a merging of the counties of Cambridgeshire & Isle of Ely and Huntingdonshire & Peterborough.

Cleveland—consisting of the county boroughs of Hartlepool and Teesside and parts of the counties of Durham and the North Riding of Yorkshire.

Cumbria—a merging of Cumberland and Westmorland.

Hereford and Worcester—a merger with the combined title.

Humberside—consisting of the county boroughs of Grimsby and Kingston upon Hull and parts of the counties of the East and West Ridings of Yorkshire and Lincolnshire (parts of Lindsey).

Leicestershire—a merging of Leicestershire and Rutland.

Lincolnshire—a merging of the three administrative parts of Holland, Kesteven and Lindsey (less that part transferred to Humberside).

North Yorkshire—consisting of parts of the North and West Ridings.

Suffolk—a merging of East and West Suffolk.

In Wales, Glamorgan was divided into three new non-metropolitan counties and the remaining twelve former counties were merged to create another five non-metropolitan counties; thus the number of Welsh counties was reduced from thirteen to eight.

Clwyd—consisting of Flintshire and parts of the counties of Denbighshire and Merioneth.

Dyfed—consisting of the counties of Cardiganshire, Carmarthenshire and Pembrokeshire.

Gwent—consisting of the county borough of Newport and parts of the counties of Brecon and Monmouthshire.

Gwynedd—consisting of Anglesey and Caernarfonshire and parts of the counties of Denbighshire and Merioneth.

Mid Glamorgan—consisting of the county borough of Merthyr Tydfil and parts of the counties of Brecon, Monmouthshire and Glamorgan.

Powys—consisting of Montgomeryshire and Radnorshire and parts of the county of Brecon.

South Glamorgan—consisting of the city of Cardiff and parts of the counties of Monmouthshire and Glamorgan.

West Glamorgan—consisting of parts of the county of Glamorgan.

County councils consist of a chairman and councillors. A county is divided into electoral divisions, each after 1977 returning one councillor elected in accordance with the Local Government Act 1972 and the Representation of the People Act 1949. The term of office of county councillors is four years, all retiring together on the fourth day after election day for county councillors.

The first election to the new county councils took place on 12th April, 1973 and the next was held on 5th May, 1977, on and after which newly elected county councillors will come into office on the day their predecessors retire. Subsequent elections will now be every fourth year, and thus the next one will be in May, 1981.

The principal functions of county councils may be summarized as follows:

Metropolitan County Councils

Strategic Planning
National Park and Countryside functions
Traffic and Transportation functions
Passenger Transport Authority
Highways
Caravan sites
Housing (Reserve Powers)
Police
Fire Service
Food and Drugs Act 1955-Sec 2
Weights and Measures
Museums and Art Galleries
Refuse disposal

Non-Metropolitan County Councils

Strategic Planning
National Park and Countryside functions
Traffic and Transportation functions
Highways
Education
Social Services
Police
Fire Service
Food and Drugs Act 1955-Sec 2
Weights and Measures
Public Libraries, Museums and Art Galleries
Refuse disposal

The Act of 1972 sections 101–2 gives authority to a county council to arrange for district councils within its area to undertake county council functions on an agency basis, excepting Education, Social Services, Police and Fire. Circular 131/72 (DOE) mentions five areas "most likely" for consideration for agency arrangements (Highways/Planning/Refuse Disposal/Consumer Protection/Libraries).

DEFINITION OF AREA

On 1st April, 1974 the County comprised the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on that date:

The county borough of Reading.

The administrative county of Berkshire, except the areas in Oxfordshire.

In the administrative county of Buckingham
- the borough of Slough;
- the urban district of Eton;
- In the rural district of Eton, the parishes of Datchet, Horton and Wraysbury, the Britwell Ward of the parish of Burnham and part of the parish of Wexham.

On 1st April, 1977 further minor alteration to the County boundaries with Buckinghamshire and Oxfordshire came into force.

The Local Government Act of 1972 has considerably changed Berkshire's boundaries, with North Berkshire transferring to Oxfordshire and Slough and Eton joining the new county from Buckinghamshire. The County Borough of Reading also joins the new Berkshire. The new county, however, remains dominated by the River Thames which has contributed so much to its history. Its county town, Reading, has always been a centre of communications and no doubt Berkshire's central situation in the South accounts for its varied development.

Although there is some evidence of prehistoric and Roman settlements in the county it was the Norman Conquest and the Reformation which were to influence Berkshire's future most. William the Conqueror began work on Windsor Castle and so established a royal connection in the county. Trade and commerce having flourished in the Middle Ages, the sale of monastery land in the 16th century brought about an increase in agriculture.

The Berkshire countryside provides rich arable and dairy farming land, but the industrial growth of Reading, the designation of Bracknell as a New Town and the inclusion of Slough within its boundaries, now provide the county with a diversity of light industry. However, in the West particularly, Berkshire remains essentially a farming area and towns like Newbury and Hungerford continue to prosper, serving an agricultural community, as well as providing homes for people working in Reading and beyond.

The development of major road schemes, and of course the completion of the M4 between London and South Wales, have contributed greatly to improving communication links, both within Berkshire and with the rest of the country.

Outdoor activities and river-sports naturally dominate the leisure and social lives of those who live in Berkshire and a number of Sports and Community Centres has been provided. The River Thames, of course, attracts many holidaymakers and boating enthusiasts and the superb countryside offers excellent opportunities for horse-riders and golfers. Other attractions include Ascot, Newbury and Windsor race courses. Berkshire also offers a number of towns and villages of historical interest, many good restaurants and of course, Windsor Castle.

Audit by District Auditor (No. 5 Audit District).

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:

The county boroughs of Chester and Warrington.
The administrative county of Chester, except the areas in Derbyshire, Greater Manchester and Merseyside.
In the administrative county of Lancaster—
  the borough of Widnes;
  in the urban district of Golborne, the wards of Culcheth and Newchurch;
  the rural district of Warrington;
  in the rural district of Whiston, the parish of Hale and so much of the parish of Bold as lies within the designated area of Warrington New Town.

Prior to local government reorganization, Cheshire's boundaries had remained substantially unchanged since Domesday.

In 1974, the shape, size and character of the county were all substantially changed. Large areas, largely urbanized, were surrendered to the new Merseyside County Council (in north Wirral), and to Greater Manchester County (around the southern fringe of the conurbation); Tintwistle in the north-east passed to Derbyshire. Cheshire received in return the two county boroughs of Chester and Warrington, together with Widnes, the rural district of Warrington and part of the Golborne Urban District—all, like Warrington County Borough, formerly in Lancashire.

The result is a more compact county with no part more than about an hour's journey by road (mostly by Cheshire's excellent motorway system). While marginally smaller in population, it is expected that new Cheshire will reach a million again during the 1980s.

Above all, new Cheshire is socially and economically well balanced. Now that the whole of the Mersey belt of heavily industrialized towns (including the New Towns of Runcorn and Warrington which continue to expand rapidly) between Merseyside and Manchester on both sides of the Manchester Ship Canal is within one county, there are great opportunities for environmental experiment and improvement to match the industrial investment and employment of the area. The brine deposits which have been so important to mid-Cheshire for centuries are a national asset, and their products are processed by the heavy chemical industry in the Mersey belt. Similarly the County deposits of building and silica sand are vital to the construction and foundry industries.

A more recent development is the proliferation of major research establishments which read like a roll-call of Britain's largest industries ranging from the Daresbury Nuclear Physics Laboratory to the Shell Research Centre at Thornton. Dispersal of large office complexes from the South-East has brought important divisions of Barclays Bank to Knutsford and other similar moves are occurring.

Agriculture (especially Dairy farming) remains important of course, and contributes to the variety of Cheshire's landscape which ranges from the gritstone of the Pennines east of Macclesfield (part of the Peak District National Park) to the rolling plains of North and South Cheshire with their striking sandstone escarpments at Alderley Edge, Helsby and Broxton. This natural beauty is enhanced by Cheshire's proximity to other National Parks in Snowdonia and the Lake District, and to the Welsh coastline.

Though there is a widely held belief that Cheshire is a dormitory for adjoining conurbations, it is estimated that 82% of Cheshire's working population are employed within its boundaries: and the county has a remarkable independence of surrounding areas for employment opportunities.

Administratively, new Cheshire is divided into eight districts.

Audit by District Auditor. (No. 11 Audit District)

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April, 1974:

The county borough of Derby.
The administrative county of Derbyshire.
In the administrative county of Chester, the rural district of Tintwistle.

It is not only Derbyshire's scenery which provides so much contrast but its industry too alters markedly from district to district. Much of the north west forms part of England's first National Park, the Peak Park, and tourism is a key industry.

Apart from the villages and towns in the National Park, towns near its border such as Buxton and Matlock are popular tourist centres and able to offer their own attractions. At Buxton there is the renowned Crescent, built by John Carr of York for the Fifth Duke of Devonshire between 1780 and 1784.

Derbyshire maintains many ancient customs and traditions, probably the most famous of which is well dressing, which is peculiar to the county. Its origins are unknown, possibly pagan, but later adopted by Christianity as an act of thanksgiving for plentiful water supplies.

Apart from tourism, farming is a leading industry, and in its various forms is important in most parts of the county. Dairy farming tends to predominate over crop farming. On a picturesque showground adjoining the River Wye at Bakewell the staging of the largest one-day agricultural show in the country takes place. The annual County Agricultural Show is held near Derby at Elvaston.

Derbyshire has been the scene of many important industrial advances. Two hundred years ago Sir Richard Arkwright opened the world's first successful water-powered cotton spinning mill on the banks of the River Derwent at Cromford, near Matlock. The mill, which represented one of the most important steps of the Industrial Revolution, still stands and is now a dye works.

Quarrying too is a long-established industry which like other industries relying on mineral wealth, makes an important contribution to the county's economy.

Many buildings in Derbyshire are, not unnaturally, constructed from local stone including some of the fine country houses. In fact, a number of Derbyshire country houses enjoy international fame and possibly none more so than Chatsworth, country seat of the Duke of Devonshire. Nearby is Haddon Hall, perhaps the most complete and authentic example of a medieval manor in England. In east Derbyshire Hardwick Hall was built in the late 16th century and there is a fine 17th-century Castle at Bolsover. Nearby Sutton Scarsdale Hall, sadly falling into ruin for the past 50 years, is now to have its finest features preserved.

Also in the north east is the smaller Barlborough Hall, a fine example of Elizabethan architecture and now a Catholic Boys' School. Melbourne Hall, south of Derby, is another house in a beautiful setting rich in period furniture and art treasures as is Kedleston Hall, a Georgian home designed partly by Robert Adam.

In Creswell Crags in the north-east is one of the two earliest known settlements of man in the British Isles. Stone circles survive at Stanton Moor, Arbor Low and on Harthill Moor, where there are traces of an Iron-Age fort.

DEFINITION OF AREA

Devon is one of the biggest counties in Britain. In area it is the third largest county in England and Wales and has the greatest length of roadway - 13,195 kilometres.

Devon is bordered on the east by Somerset and Dorset and on the west by Cornwall. Its steep and rugged north coast meets the Bristol Channel; the more sheltered beaches and ports of the south coast face the English Channel. The county town is Exeter, where the County Council has its headquarters.

The naval history of Devon is legendary. Drake, Gilbert, Raleigh and Frobisher are among the county's great Elizabethan seamen. The tradition continues at Plymouth where the Royal Navy still operates a large base.

The county has two national parks, Dartmoor and Exmoor (partly in Somerset), and its fine beaches and attractive thatched villages help make it the most popular holiday area in Britain. Tourism and agriculture are its main sources of income.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:

The county borough of Bournemouth.

The administrative county of Dorset.

In the administrative county of Hampshire—

- the borough of Christchurch:
- in the rural district of Ringwood and Fordingbridge, the parishes of Hurn and St. Leonards and St. Ives, parts of the parishes of Christchurch East and Sopley.

Dorset comprises some of the most attractive landscapes in Britain. Most of West Dorset and the Purbeck area have been designated Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty. There are four National Nature Reserves at Arne, Hartland Moor, Morden Bog and Studland Heath, together with numerous sites of special scientific interest.

Topography is varied, ranging from the Chalk Downs covering most of Central-North East Dorset, the Jurassics of West and South Dorset and the Tertiaries of the Hampshire Basin, in the east of the county. There are several unique geological features, particularly along the interesting coastline, most notably at Chesil beach and Lulworth Cove.

There are many historic features of interest in Dorset. The Chalk Downs in particular are a rich source of pre-Christian archaeological features in the form of earthworks, tumuli and forts, the most famous being Maiden Castle near Dorchester and Badbury Rings near Blandford.

There are also many historic towns, e.g. Blandford, Sherborne, Lyme Regis and Dorchester.

Dorset's economy is based principally on agriculture, quarrying and consumer services. Manufacturing industry is predominantly small in scale, though Poole in recent years has attracted certain growth industries. Tourism is the largest industry, based on the county's rich landscape and attractive coastal resorts of Bournemouth, Swanage, Weymouth, Bridport and Lyme Regis. There are also several large defence establishments at Bovington, East Lulworth and Portland, together with the Atomic Energy Establishment at Winfrith, which contribute significantly to the local economy. Extractive industries are also important in certain locations, the principal extractions being sand and gravel, ball clay and Portland and Purbeck stone.

As regards amenities, several are of national significance, such as the village of Milton Abbas, Abbotsbury Swannery, Compton Acres Gardens, Poole, Corfe Castle, Brownsea Island, Portland Bill and Lulworth Cove.

Historic buildings—Athelhampton House, Sherborne Castle, Kingston Lacey House.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:
The county borough of Darlington.
The administrative county of Durham, except the areas in Cleveland and Tyne and Wear.
In the administrative county of Yorkshire, North Riding, the rural district of Startforth.

The county of Durham is bounded on the west side by the High Pennines which form the boundary with the county of Cumbria, to the north by the River Derwent and the county of Tyne and Wear and to the south by the counties of North Yorkshire and Cleveland.

The southern part of the county is mostly rural in character (with hill farming in the west), except for the industrial area around Teesside. The northern part of the county has two distinct features: to the west it is mostly rural and hill-farming country, while to the east it is mainly urban in character. The east side of the county which borders on the North Sea is chiefly a coal-mining area.

Durham City, the administrative centre, has a Norman Cathedral and Castle and there are several other medieval castles in the county, notably Barnard Castle, Raby Castle and Lumley Castle.

Mining was formerly the main industry in the county but is now in decline. Other industries are iron and steel and chemicals and recently the trend has been towards the creation of light industrial estates.

Durham has much attractive scenery, especially in Weardale, Teesdale and the Valley of the Derwent which extend into the High Pennines.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:

The administrative counties of Cardiganshire, Carmarthenshire and Pembrokeshire.

Two thousand square miles of coast and countryside in south west Wales make up Dyfed, the largest county in Wales.

Formed by the amalgamation of the former counties of Cardigan, Carmarthen and Pembroke, the county has all the characteristics of Wales. To the west and north are mountains and lakes, fast flowing rivers and quiet coastal villages which contrast with the industrial area around Llanelli in the south eastern corner of the county.

About 170 miles of the county's coastline is within the Pembrokeshire Coast National Park—an area of spectacular coastal scenery, unspoilt cliffs and rugged headlands. And to the east the hills of Carmarthenshire form part of the Brecon Beacons National Park.

The county's predominant industry is agriculture with dairying playing a major role. On the industrial scene two areas are prominent. The anthracite coalfield and manufacturing area around Llanelli in the south east and the oil refining area of Milford Haven, Britain's premier deep water harbour, in the south west.

The recent completion of the M4 which now links the county with the rest of South Wales and with London is expected to contribute greatly to the manufacturing and tourism potential of the county.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The County comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:

The county borough of Southend-on-Sea.
The administrative county of Essex.

Essex is still a rapidly expanding county, where historic towns thrive alongside modern communities, such as the two new towns and the County Council's own scheme of development for South Woodham Ferrers. One of the main reasons for this growth, both residential and industrial, is its ease of access to London. It is an important gateway to the Continent through the ports of Tilbury and Harwich and Parkeston and Southend and Stansted Airports. The ever-growing Tilbury docks handle trade with all parts of the world. Most of the industrial activity in Essex is centred on the Thames, but modern industries of many kinds can be found in or near the towns elsewhere in the county, with the more traditional industries and crafts in the rural areas.

In contrast to industrial Thames-side the hinterland of Essex is one of the main cereal-growing areas in England and fruit-growing, market gardening and sugar beet cultivation are other important agricultural activities. The oyster farms—of historic significance—cockling and other inshore fishing still yield valuable 'crops' along the creeks and estuaries.

Essex is also a holiday county, with its seaside resorts of which the largest is Southend-on-Sea, and riverside towns many of which have developed as yachting centres to meet the growing popularity of this form of recreation. Inland there are the attractions of several country parks and of the Epping and Hatfield Forests in the west. The quiet countryside, with its many unspoilt villages and historic towns, extends northwards to join the particularly beautiful Constable Country on the Suffolk border.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:

The county borough of Gloucester.

The administrative county of Gloucestershire, except the areas in Avon.

Gloucestershire is divided into six Districts (Gloucester, Cheltenham, Tewkesbury, Stroud, Cotswold and Forest of Dean) and 265 civil parishes. The principal urban areas are at Gloucester, Cheltenham, Stroud and Cirencester, having populations of approximately 90,000, 86,150, 19,600 and 14,500 respectively.

The 1974 Report of the South West Economic Planning Council entitled "A Strategic Settlement Pattern for the South West" recommends that Gloucestershire should plan to cope with about 120,000 more people by the year 2,001. The main concentration of this increase (approximately 80%) will centre on Gloucester and Cheltenham.

The County has a well balanced range of industries and employment. The historic impetus of natural resources, wool in the Cotswolds and timber, iron ore and coal in the Forest of Dean, provided a basic industrial structure and, although the associated industries have declined in post-war years, the admirable communications network of railways and the M.5 Motorway from Birmingham to Exeter, with a link to the M.50 Motorway at Strensham, which provides speedy connections with most parts of the country, has stimulated new industrial development. Much of this has taken place in Gloucester and Cheltenham and has included not only the manufacturing and processing of such commodities as ice-cream and nylon fibres, but the administrative headquarters of national companies, the Countryside Commission and the Central Electricity Generating Board. Numerous smaller industries, particularly those in the light engineering servicing and distributive trades, have also been attracted to the county and existing pressures for further expansion of trade and industry are high. The county still displays much of its old farming character, especially on some of the magnificent parkland estates, but economic pressures have resulted in changes to modern methods of farming.

The county town is the most inland port in Great Britain, being linked to Sharpness (which is the nearest large docks to the industrial Midlands) by the Gloucester and Berkeley Ship Canal which is 16½ miles long. It helps to facilitate the transit of goods and materials both within this country and abroad as well as within the County.

The greater regard for conservation is everywhere evident and midst all the changes the county retains the inherent beauty that has made it famous as a tourist and holiday attraction, both the Forest of Dean and the Cotswolds containing expansive areas of great landscape value

Greater Manchester is one of the major conurbations of the country and the largest in the North West. Some, 2,700,000 people live in the 500 square miles of the County. As a metropolitan county Greater Manchester is second to West Yorkshire in area and second to West Midlands in population.

The traditional industries of the county have been coalmining and cotton manufacture but the industrial structure has been transformed in the last two decades. The old industries have now given way to light engineering, transport and warehousing, although the old crafts and skills are still very much in evidence. In the centre of the county the regional offices of government departments have been joined by the national and regional headquarters of major banks, insurance companies and building societies. Major shipping projects have been completed throughout the county with the centre of the City of Manchester now witnessing the development of one of the largest covered shopping areas in the whole of Europe.

Greater Manchester is busy and thriving as is evident from the skyscrapers and industrial estates growing everywhere in the county. Manchester International Airport is used by some 3,000,000 passengers a year: its freight traffic is growing appreciably. The Port of Manchester has its terminal docks in the county which take cargo to and from all over the world. There are two liner train depots at the heart of the railway system: for rail passengers London is but 155 minutes from Manchester. All parts of the county are connected by the urban motorway system to the national network—M6, M56, M61, M62, M63.

The creation of the Greater Manchester County Council gives the conurbation its first opportunity to project a single and comprehensive image of the area. The county council and the ten districts within the county are the successors to some 70 local authorities previously providing services in the area. From 1st April 1974, the county council is facing up to responsibilities which the Local Government Act 1972 has placed on metropolitan counties, responsibilities for the structure plan, for transportation and major highways, for public protection such as police, fire services and consumer advice. By itself and in association with the districts, the county council gives support to the arts and recreation. The county council is looking forward to the challenge of the future.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:

The county borough of Newport.

The administrative county of Monmouthshire except the parts to be comprised in the counties of Mid Glamorgan and South Glamorgan.

In the administrative county of Brecon:

- the urban district of Brynmawr;
- in the rural district of Crickhowell, the parish of Llanelli.

The new county of Gwent is among the richest and most heavily populated counties in Wales, containing about 436,500 people in an area of approximately 137,571 hectares. The largest towns are Newport, Pontypool and Cwmbran—the first new town in Wales and the administrative centre of the new authority.

Although only a comparatively small county, few areas in Britain have such a variety of history, culture and countryside. Physically it is a county with markedly different landscape types and a full share of natural beauty. In the centre and east is the Plain of Gwent, an area of undulating relief containing 59 square miles of the Brecon Beacons National Park, the Wye Valley area of outstanding natural beauty and some proposed country parks. In the west is the highland area with deep valleys separated by plateaux, some rising up to 1,750 feet, while in sharp contrast the Gwent Moors skirting the River Severn in the south of the county rises only a few feet above sea level.

Gwent is the gateway to South Wales, its important strategic position evidenced by a long turbulent history. The Romans built their western military headquarters at Caerleon and a civil settlement at Caerwent. The eastern areas, especially the Monnow and Wye Valleys, and the southern margins of the county, in particular, reflect the influence of the Norman occupation. This is most clearly seen in the settlement forms, in such castles as Chepstow, Monmouth, Grosmont, Skenfrith, White Castle and Raglan, in the abbeys of Tintern and Llanthony, in manor farms, and in ancient field and tenurial arrangements. Apart from a limited number of Anglo-Norman Settlements over three-quarters of the county was and has remained Welsh.

A further sharp distinction exists between the majority of the county which is agricultural, and the north-west which is part of the important industrial-complex of South Wales. It was the Industrial Revolution that was to change what was a predominantly agricultural area. The development of ironworks and collieries was accompanied by rapid population growth as workers moved into the county. Today these industries do not have the overriding control over the life of the county they once had. Basic industries like coal and steel, aluminium and man-made fibres remain among the largest employers in Gwent, but the industrial pattern of the county is changing as a large number and variety of industries have been introduced to create a more balanced industrial structure. New firms can benefit from government financial assistance available to all the county and also from the excellent access to the industrial areas of the West Midlands via the new A449, M50 and M5 motorways, and to the south-east via the Severn Bridge and M4 motorway.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:
The administrative counties of Anglesey and Caernarfon.
The administrative county of Merioneth except the rural district of Edeyrnion.
In the administrative county of Denbigh:
- the urban district of Llanrwst;
- in the rural district of Aled, the parish of Llansantffraid Glan Conwy;
- in the rural district of Hiraethog, the parishes of Eglwysbach, Llanddoget, Llanrwst Rural and Tir Ifan.

By any standards the area of the county is one of spectacular natural beauty, containing within its bounds some of the most consistently lovely scenery to be found in the whole of Europe, and providing much scope for imaginative planning. The new county contains the whole of the Snowdonia National Park, which stretches from near Conwy in the north to the Dyfi estuary in the south, and covers an area of 804 square miles, or 53·5% of the Gwynedd area. Further areas under protective designation are the Llŷn area of outstanding natural beauty with an area of 60 square miles, and the Anglesey Coast area of outstanding natural beauty, with an area of 83 square miles. Jointly these comprise a further 9·1% of the new county area. The Great Orme, the coast of LlyEn and five sections of the Anglesey coast have been designated as Heritage Coasts and comprise 100 miles of the county's 311 miles of coast. Some 135,000 people in the county, 65% of the total, are Welsh-speaking, the highest percentage of any county in Wales.

The new county contains five district council areas—Arfon, Aberconwy, Ynys Môn, Dwyfor and Meirionnydd. Geographically the county falls into five distinct physical areas, which in turn have a noticeable effect on economic structure and settlement patterns. These are as follows:

(a) Ynys Môn—The Isle of Anglesey
The island has a beautiful coastline with many sandy coves much frequented by holidaymakers, and rising in places to form spectacular cliffs.

At present there is only one highway bridging point between the island and the mainland—at Menai Bridge, with the Britannia Bridge further up the Straits providing the rail link. Work has started on providing a second road link by means of a roadway constructed above the railway bridge. Holyhead, situated on Holy Island in the extreme west, is a deep water port, and an important road and rail terminus. A ferry service to Ireland commences there.

The island is bisected by the A5 trunk road linking Holyhead, Birmingham and London, and a little farther to the south, the London to Holyhead railway line. Traditionally, Anglesey has always been a rich farming area.

Apart from agriculture, the island's economy also shows a considerable reliance upon tourism. There is a major aluminium smelting plant at Holyhead, a nuclear power station at Wylfa and an Oil Terminal off-shore at Amlwych, with other, mainly light industries concentrated in the larger towns, particularly at Holyhead, Amlwch and Llangefni, where there is an industrial estate.

(b) Snowdonia
Snowdonia consists primarily of an extensive mountainous tract, with large areas lying above the 2,000-ft. contour, and rising in Yr Wyddfa (Snowdon) and the Carneddau to over 1,000 metres. Most of Snowdonia has been included in the Snowdonia National Park, which also comprises a large part of Meirionnydd. Large stretches are covered by heath and heather moor, with extensive sheep farming the main economic activity. Slate quarrying, the area's unique industry, which developed rapidly in the 19th century and resulted in the growth of the area's most notable settlements, is still carried on at Bethesda, Dyffryn Nantlle and Blaenau Ffestiniog.

Three major economic features of the mountain core area may be mentioned—agriculture, forestry and tourism. Agriculture is the largest single land use in the upland areas. Large areas of this region are at present under forests—mainly coniferous-species, and these forests have a very considerable impact on the landscape. By far the largest operator is the Forestry Commission, although some areas are under the control of private concerns.

The other major economic factor in the National Park area is tourism, although the tourist industry is of major importance throughout Gwynedd. The National Park is within easy access of the Midlands and North West England, and attracts large numbers of visitors during the summer months, in some cases to the detriment of the environment. Some of the mountain masses are suffering from excessive visitor usage.

(c) The North Coastal Belt
An area which may be taken as extending from

Llandudno in the north-east to Caernarfon in the south-west. A comparatively small area, this coastal zone nonetheless has a more diversified economy than any other area in Gwynedd. The northernmost of the coastal settlements, Llandudno, is a 19th-century resort town of spacious layout, and characterized by numerous large hotels. Conwy and Caernarfon both boast medieval castles of outstanding importance and within their town walls both still exhibit a well-preserved medieval street plan.

Bangor is a University town with much employment associated with both the University College and other branches of further education.

The county is much in need of manufacturing industry to diversify an economy which at the moment is too narrowly based, and a good selection of vacant sites, some in local authority ownership, are available to attract prospective industrialists. The whole of the county of Gwynedd is a Government Assisted Area for Expansion and qualifies for financial assistance under the Industry Act 1972. North West Gwynedd is designated a Special Development Area, while the remainder of the county has Development Area status with the exception of Llandudno, which is designated an Intermediate Area.

(d) Dyffryn Conwy

In many respects this area is associated economically with the preceding North Coastal Belt, but is considered separately chiefly on the grounds of its distinct geographical unity and character.

On either side the wooded sides of the valley rise steeply into the hills of Clwyd to the east, and the mountains of Snowdonia to the west. The sides of the valley hold many small villages, and there are no large settlements, Llanrwst being the market town.

(e) The Lleyn Peninsula

An outstandingly attractive area. It is a strongly agricultural region of small, isolated farms, and scattered villages and hamlets. It has long been a stronghold of the Welsh language and culture.

This is an area which has long suffered from rural depopulation, and apart from farming, forestry and tourism, there is little source of employment to maintain a large population. There are a few small manufacturing industries at the towns of Pwllheli and Porthmadog.

Tourism is an important aspect of the local economy. The area possesses a superb coastline.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:
The county borough of Worcester.
The administrative county of Herefordshire.
The administrative county of Worcestershire, except the boroughs of Halesowen and Stourbridge.

The county of Hereford and Worcester stretches from the outskirts of Birmingham to the Welsh Border. Scenically it ranks among the foremost, including among its attractions the beauties of the Wye Valley, the Malvern Hills, the Black Mountains, the Vale of Evesham, and the Broadway area of the Cotswolds. This is a county of cathedrals, abbeys and priories, whose festival music attracts many. The Wye is one of the finest fishing rivers in the country, and the Severn provides rapidly expanding leisure facilities for boating. At blossom time the Vale of Evesham and the Teme Valley rival the Dutch bulb fields as a vision of delight.

Although the county has strong tourist attractions, it also enjoys vigorous industrial growth. Well served by motorways, new industries are fast developing, particularly at Redditch New Town and at Droitwich where a town expansion scheme is well under way. At Hereford new industrial opportunities are opening out at the former Ministry of Defence Depot at Rotherwas, and sites are expanding at Leominster, Ross-on-Wye, Bromyard, Kington and Ledbury. The administrative county is comprised of nine districts and includes 433 civil parishes of which seven are successor parishes.

Audit by District Auditor. (No. 11 Audit District)

DEFINITION OF AREA
The County comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1 April, 1974:

- The County Borough of Lincoln.
- The Administrative Counties of Lincoln (Parts of Holland) and Lincoln (Parts of Kesteven).
- The Administrative County of Lincoln (Parts of Lindsey), except the areas transferred to Humberside.

Lincolnshire, the second largest county in England, has surprising contrasts of scenery. The Fens and Lowlands in the south have attractions for ornithologists and wild-fowlers and also rich agricultural land and acres of bulb fields around Spalding. The south-west is well wooded and served by several rivers, the Welland, Glen, Eden and Slea.

Along the east coast there is a vast expanse of sandy shores and dunes with nature reserves at Gibraltar Point and Saltfleetby. These make a wonderful background for the holiday resorts, such as Skegness, Mablethorpe and Sutton. In the north-east the Lincolnshire Wolds rise to over 500 feet, providing spectacular views.

Lincoln, the County town, is a centre of archaeological interest with remains dating from the Roman times and has a magnificent Cathedral, castle, museums and art gallery.

Throughout the County, there are other towns rich in history and interest, such as Boston—an ancient port, Sleaford, the County town of former Kesteven, Stamford, an architectural gem second to none with greystone houses and churches, Louth with its famous fifteenth-century church, and Woodhall Spa, an inland resort. In addition, there are many charming villages such as Tealby, Bolingbroke and Fulbeck.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the area of the administrative county of Northumberland (except the areas in Tyne and Wear) which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974.

Northumberland, England's most northerly and sixth largest county in area, has six districts; Berwick upon Tweed, Alnwick, Castle Morpeth, Wansbeck, Blyth Valley and Tynedale. Its Parliamentary divisions are Berwick upon Tweed, Morpeth, Blyth and Hexham.

The Northumbria Police Authority is a combined authority for Northumberland and the Metropolitan County of Tyne and Wear.

In association with the district council the county has promoted the New Town of Cramlington (planned population 62,000), the new county's main growth point, and pursues a vigorous programme to rebuild its economy by the introduction and development of new industry. The Northumberland National Park lies wholly within the county's boundary.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The County of North Yorkshire is 2,053,163 acres in area and is easily the largest County in England and Wales.

Within the County are 598 square miles (total area of park 680 square miles) of the Yorkshire Dales National Park and 530 square miles (total area of park 553 square miles) of the North York Moors National Park.

The County is included in the Yorkshire and Humberside Region. Part of the County has "development area" status and the remainder is classified as "intermediate area". Its economy is heavily dependent on agriculture and the tourist industry.

The County is predominantly a rural area but one of its main features is its diversity: the County contains several centres of great historic interest; market towns with light industrial development; the coalfield area in the South; sparsley populated upland areas; and the extensive lowland area in the Vale of York.

Audit by District Auditor. (No. 4 Audit District)

DEFINITION OF AREA
The county comprises the area of the administrative county of Salop which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974.

Under the Local Government Act, 1972, the boundary of the county remains unchanged, but the county has been divided into six districts, namely, Oswestry, North Shropshire, Shrewsbury and Atcham, The Wrekin, South Shropshire and Bridgnorth.

Shropshire is divided diagonally by the River Severn into a hilly area in the south and west, and an undulating plain in the north and east. As a result, the county is famous for its varied geology, and for the variety and beauty of its scenery.

Archaeologically, it is rich in prehistoric settlement sites and iron-age hill-forts; and it includes Viroconium which, after London, was probably the third largest city of Roman Britain.

In the Middle Ages, Shropshire formed the central part of the Marches of Wales, and a chain of castles was built to defend the border. Monasteries were founded which have left notable remains, particularly at Wenlock, Buildwas and Haughmond. Shrewsbury, the county town, Bridgnorth, Wenlock, Ludlow, Oswestry and Bishop's Castle established themselves as boroughs, while other places became busy market towns with a prosperity based on agriculture, especially Shropshire sheep and cattle. All the towns have interesting architectural features: Ludlow is outstanding as a place in which castle, church, houses, bridges, and setting are all things of beauty and there is hardly a building in the centre which does not merit preservation.

Shropshire in the 18th century became "the cradle of the Industrial Revolution". At Coalbrookdale in 1709, Abraham Darby discovered how to smelt iron with coke and for a hundred years the iron industry of Shropshire was the most prosperous in Britain. Here the world's first iron bridge and iron ship were built. Caughley and Coalport became famous names among collectors of fine china. Now the Ironbridge Gorge Museum Trust has established a museum of industrial archaeology at Coalbrookdale and Blists Hill to preserve relics of Shropshire's great industrial past.

At present, a new town is being created in the same area of the county, and has been named Telford, after the engineer and road builder, who was Shropshire's first county surveyor from 1788–1834.

Charles Darwin, the great naturalist, was born in Shrewsbury in 1809.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:

The county borough of Cardiff.

In the administrative county of Glamorgan:—
  the boroughs of Barry and Cowbridge;
  the urban district of Penarth;
  the rural district of Cardiff except the parishes of Llanfedw, Llanilterne, Pentyrch, Rhydygwern, Rudry and Van;
  the rural district of Cowbridge except the parishes of Llanharan, Llanharry, Llanilid and Peterston-super-Montem.

In the administrative county of Monmouthshire, in the rural district of Magor and St. Mellons, the parish of St. Mellons.

South Glamorgan—population of 389,200 situated on the coastal plain of South Wales, includes the City of Cardiff, the seaside towns of Barry and Penarth, the ancient market town of Cowbridge and the Vale of Glamorgan.

Although Cardiff—capital and largest city of Wales—has for 150 years been a major city, for centuries it was smaller than Cowbridge.

The expansion of Cardiff came largely as a result of the building of the Docks to export coal and iron from the Valleys which fan out to the north.

Since the mid-19th century, Cardiff has developed into the major commercial, administrative and financial centre for Wales and it has a wide range of arts, entertainment, cultural and sporting facilities.

There is Cardiff Castle, which for centuries was the heart of the community, also Llandaff Cathedral, the National Museum of Wales and the St. Fagans Folk Museum.

The Arms Park—the National Rugby Stadium—is known throughout the world and other sporting facilities include Ninian Park (Cardiff City AFC headquarters) and the National Sports Centre for Wales.

Despite the disappearance of the coal export trade, Cardiff Docks still flourish and, in addition to being a major office centre—it has the Welsh Office and other Government Regional Offices—it also has a wide range of industries including steel making and car component manufacturing.

Barry, the second largest town in the county, also has a busy docks and is also known as one of the major holiday towns in South Wales, with many tourist attractions including a huge holiday camp. It also has many industries.

Penarth is another favourite South Wales seaside resort and has developed as a popular residential area.

Cowbridge and the Vale of Glamorgan make up one of the most beautiful and rich farming areas in Britain.

A feature of the recent development of the county has been the improvement in communications by road, air and rail.

London is less than 2½ hours away by train and under 3 hours by car, while there is an impressive airport at Rhoose with the most modern air traffic control and passenger handling facilities.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:

The county boroughs of Burton upon Trent and Stoke-on-Trent.

The administrative county of Staffordshire, except the urban districts in West Midlands.

With reorganization Staffordshire lost Aldridge-Brownhills Urban District to the West Midlands Metropolitan County but incorporates the county boroughs of Stoke-on-Trent and Burton upon Trent. The new county comprises nine districts. Staffordshire has been an administrative area for more than a thousand years, and was formed from the five "hundreds" of the Anglo-Saxon Kingdom of Mercia which were taxed for the upkeep of the Stafford fortress. The county was sparsely populated until the Industrial Revolution, when its rich resources of clay and coal were exploited, giving rise to rapid growth in the potteries of North Staffordshire, made famous by the name of Josiah Wedgwood, and to the "Black Country" in the south. This growth left a legacy of despoliation and dereliction, and attempts are now being made to reclaim many of the worst areas still remaining. The county town is also an important industrial centre, especially for electrical engineering. Staffordshire has always been at the centre of national transport routes, from the age of the canals to the present day, with the main London–Glasgow railway line and the M6 motorway running through the county.

There are many areas of beautiful countryside in Staffordshire, including part of the Peak District National Park and Cannock Chase Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty. Other attractions are the Chasewater Recreation Centre, Trentham Park and Alton Towers in the Churnet Valley. Lichfield Cathedral is also a major tourist attraction and the city is also famous as the birthplace of Dr. Johnson.

Audit by District Auditor. (No. 10 Audit District)

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April, 1974:

The county borough of Ipswich.
The administrative county of East Suffolk, except the areas in Norfolk.
The administrative county of West Suffolk.

Suffolk is the twenty-fifth largest out of the 39 new non-metropolitan counties in England. However, the average density of 0·61 persons per acre illustrates the sparsely populated agricultural nature of much of the area. Yet it is in relative terms one of the fastest growing areas of the country.

The basic road framework of the county consists of the A12 London to Great Yarmouth trunk road and the A45 Midlands to Felixstowe trunk road. The extreme western part of Suffolk is crossed by the A11 London to Norwich trunk road. These roads, together with the A140 Ipswich–Norwich trunk road, provide the principal internal and external road links for the county.

The settlement pattern of the county exhibits a fairly well-defined hierarchy of settlements with the main towns, the market towns and village centres each providing social and community facilities for their area at a scale appropriate to their size and function. The major centres of Ipswich, Lowestoft and Bury St. Edmunds can be expected to maintain or enhance their position while towns such as Beccles, Felixstowe, Stowmarket, Woodbridge, Hadleigh, Sudbury, Haverhill and Newmarket will continue to provide locally important shopping and service facilities. At the lower end of the scale it may become increasingly difficult for the smaller market towns and villages to provide economically the range and standard of service which will be expected.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:

The county boroughs of Bradford, Dewsbury, Halifax, Huddersfield, Leeds, Wakefield.

The municipal boroughs of Batley, Brighouse, Castleford, Keighley, Morley, Ossett, Pontefract, Pudsey, Spenborough, Todmorden.

The urban districts of Aireborough, Baildon, Bingley, Colne Valley, Denby Dale, Denholme, Elland, Featherstone, Garforth, Hebden Royd, Heckmondwike, Hemsworth, Holmfirth, Horbury, Horsforth, Ilkley, Kirkburton, Knottingley, Meltham, Mirfield, Normanton, Otley, Queensbury and Shelf, Ripponden, Rothwell, Shipley, Silsden, Sowerby Bridge, Stanley.

The rural districts of Hepton and Wakefield.

Parts of the rural districts of Hemsworth, Osgoldcross, Skipton, Tadcaster, Wetherby, Wharfedale.

West Yorkshire is one of the six metropolitan counties prescribed by the Local Government Act 1972 for administrative purposes. The county extends from Todmorden in the west to Knottingley in the east and from Ilkley in the north to Denby Dale in the south.

The more important services for which the county council is responsible are planning and transportation, police, fire, consumer protection and refuse disposal. The county comprises the metropolitan districts of Bradford, Calderdale, Kirklees, Leeds and Wakefield and the services administered by their councils include education, personal social services, libraries and refuse collection.

The converging valleys of the River Aire and the River Calder and their tributaries provide the key to the distinctive character of West Yorkshire. In the hilly western section of the county the valleys cut deeply into the hard sandstones and gritstones of the Pennine Range and most of the woollen textile industries of Yorkshire are located around this area. Towards the east the valleys become wider until the terrain gradually flattens out near the edge of the Vale of York, and in this eastern section of the county many coal-mining communities are to be found. There is a great diversity of other industries in West Yorkshire, including the manufacture of textile machinery, various engineering trades, glass manufacture and chemicals.

An important feature of the county's highway network is the central length of the Lancashire—Yorkshire Motorway M62 which crosses the county boundary at Windy Hill and runs to the M1–M62 interchange at Lofthouse, south of Leeds. This route scales the once forbidding barrier of the Pennines and links the West Yorkshire industrial area with the Greater Manchester complex. It is expected to play a vital role in realizing the economic potential of both regions, and work continues on the M18 towards the Humberside Ports.

So far as air transport is concerned, the Leeds–Bradford Airport at Yeadon provides scheduled service flights to other parts of the United Kingdom and to certain continental centres.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The county comprises the area of the administrative County of Wiltshire which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974.

Wiltshire is a county of contrasts—a countryside of vast chalk downs, rising to almost 1,000 ft. in places, of clear flowing streams, often in deep valleys and fertile vales, and numerous well-wooded districts. From Salisbury Plain and the Marlborough Downs radiate all the chalk ridges of southern and eastern England.

Here were the early centres of civilization, for Wiltshire has more prehistoric relics than any other county, notably the gigantic circles of Stonehenge, its prototype of Woodhenge, the even older Avebury, and Silbury Hill, the greatest artificial mound in Europe.

Apart from the growing industrial and commercial town of Swindon and the city of Salisbury, Wiltshire towns are small in size. The villages and market towns are characterized by picturesque groupings of stone-built or half-timbered and thatched houses and many dignified later period residences and public buildings. The churches are ancient and display many features of great architectural interest. Wiltshire is celebrated too, for its magnificent and historic county mansions.

With an area of 860,000 acres, Wiltshire is one of England's largest inland counties. Wiltshire is essentially a farming county; agriculture and its associated rural undertakings are still the principal industries, as they have been for many years.

Although predominantly rural, Wiltshire is, nevertheless, in terms of population and new building a rapidly expanding area. With a population of just over half a million and a birth-rate higher than the average, the county is expected to continue to grow. Expansion is most likely in three areas—Swindon, already by far the largest centre of population and industry; around Salisbury; and in the West Wiltshire towns.

There are five district councils. These are, with their administrative centres: North Wiltshire (Chippenham); Thamesdown Borough (Swindon); West Wiltshire (Trowbridge); Kennet (Devizes); and Salisbury (Salisbury).

GREATER LONDON GOVERNMENT

Under the London Government Act 1963, the Greater London Council and the 32 chartered boroughs came into existence on 1st April 1965. These bodies replaced the London and Middlesex County Councils, the County Boroughs of Croydon, East Ham and West Ham, 28 Metropolitan Boroughs, 39 non-county boroughs and 15 urban district councils. The City of London Corporation remained undisturbed with greater powers.

Functions of the Greater London Council, the City Corporation and the London Boroughs are summarized under the respective headings in the following pages. Both the Chairman of the Greater London Council and the Lord Mayor of London have the privilege of being addressed as "The Right Honourable".

At the outset Aldermen of the Greater London Council and of London Boroughs numbered one sixth of the Councillors, but the Local Government Act 1972 provided that the office of alderman ceased to exist in the G.L.C. and London Boroughs on the fourth day after the G.L.C. election in 1977 and the 1978 election as regards the London Boroughs.

Greater London Council and London Borough Councillors have four years' terms of office retiring together. The next election of Greater London Council Councillors will be held in May, 1981. Under the London Government Act 1967, the next London Borough Elections will be held in May, 1982.

LONDON BOROUGHS ASSOCIATION

The London Boroughs Association, whose constitution and objects are set out below, was formed in 1964 to act as a forum in which the London boroughs can discuss common problems; to provide machinery through which they can co-ordinate their activities; and to enable them to express their views corporately to the government, the GLC and other bodies.

Constitution

The Association is composed of three representatives of each of the 32 London Borough Councils and the City Corporation. It appoints Committees to deal with various aspects of its work.

(c) To express the views of the Association and to consult with appropriate bodies or persons whenever deemed advisable.

GREATER LONDON AREA: RATING STATISTICS 1978/79

The Municipal Year Book is pleased to be able to publish details of the general rate levied by the City of London and the 32 London Boroughs, and is grateful to the London Section of the Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy for permission to take extracts from their annual edition of the Southwark Rates Return, so called by reason of its compilation by the Borough Treasurer of the London Borough of Southwark for many years past.

The general rates quoted in columns 8 and 9 below are those levied on commercial properties, i.e. including G.L.C. and Metropolitan Police precepts, but excluding water and sewerage and sewage charges. These are the gross rates before deduction of the domestic rate relief.

The domestic rate relief in 1978/79 remains the same 18·5p in £ as for 1977/78, except that the following London Boroughs now have an individual figure for this relief.

GREATER LONDON COUNCIL

The County Hall, London, SE1 7PB (01-633 5000).

Pop., 7,027,600, RV, £1,886,300,000; General Rate, 16·1p; Net Debt, £1,610,000,000, Area, 390,302 Ac.

A brief summary of the principal services provided by the GLC is given below.

The Council, as strategic planning authority for Greater London, has prepared the Greater London Development Plan, which has been approved with modifications in July 1976, by the Secretary of State for the Environment. The Plan lays down basic principles for future development and, in addition to its main policies for housing, population, employment, transportation and environmental matters, covers such subjects as the River Thames, the Green Belt, public open space and recreation, town centres of strategic importance, shopping, public utilities and other subjects that affect the life of Londoners. The Plan provides a framework for local planning by the London Borough Councils. Major schemes with which the GLC is concerned include the replanning of the Covent Garden area, the redevelopment of the 8½ square miles of the London Docklands, and Thamesmead, a large housing development on what was once marshland. The Council is also planning the introduction of a Thames Barrier designed tp prevent the Thames from flooding without interfering with shipping at normal times.

Although the borough councils are the planning authorities in their own areas, they have to refer certain applications to the GLC for planning permission. These include applications having more than just local significance, and those within the Council's own comprehensive development areas. The Boroughs also seek the Council's direction on some types of applications, e.g. departures from the Initial Development Plan, and proposals which could affect a GLC road or its responsibilities for traffic and transport.

The Council is responsible for the broad policy and financial control of the central (red) buses and the underground services provided by the London Transport Executive. As highway authority, the Council is responsible for the construction, improvement and maintenance of some 870 miles of main thoroughfares (the metropolitan roads), their maintenance being by and large delegated to the London Borough Councils.

The Council maintains three road and two pedestrian tunnels under the Thames, the Woolwich free ferry, nine river piers, sixteen road bridges over the River Thames between Waterloo and Hampton Court (responsibility for the last named being shared with Surrey County Council) and various lengths of river wall embankment, which have recently been the subject of works to raise the river wall as an interim protection before construction of the Thames Barrier. It also maintains most metropolitan road structures, namely bridges, flyovers, underpasses, subways, etc., and approximately seven miles of pipe subways.

The Council is the traffic order-making authority for nearly 8,000 miles of roads in London. Its responsibilities include the introduction of measures of traffic constraint, bus priority and environmental measures as well as measures to assist pedestrian and traffic flows and safety. The Council's Inner Parking Area of some 40 square miles extends from Hammersmith to Bermondsey and from Camden Town to Brixton. It also has powers to control off-street parking and the provision of parking spaces for new developments in central London. Schemes to control overnight parking of heavy lorries in residential streets in inner London, and to ban the movement of very large lorries through the sensitive central area have recently been implemented.

It is the authority for all traffic signals and pedestrian crossings (except on trunk roads) in the Greater London area. It is currently bringing signals under centralized computer control (about 700 now completed), in association with a control centre in New Scotland Yard.

Although the London boroughs are the primary housing authorities, the Council in 1977 built 5,485 new homes and used these and another 9,373 relet or modernized homes to rehouse families displaced from slum or other clearance areas as well as other priority cases. About 12,233 transfers or exchanges have been arranged in 1977. Assistance has been given to Housing Associations to convert houses or build new ones. The Greater London Council is the sole London authority for providing new homes outside Greater London and in 1977 it helped provide new homes for 1,814 tenancies allocated to 34 expanding towns. It has also provided homes for elderly tenants in seaside and country towns. On 1 April 1971, over 44,000 GLC homes were transferred to the London Boroughs, and a further 5,000 dwellings have been transferred since that date. In 1977 no dwellings were allocated to London Boroughs.

Since May 1977 a complete review of the council's housing role has been undertaken and new policies are being formulated, major changes involve concentrating resources on the inner city, offering dwellings for sale on a large scale and transferring the council's housing stock to the primary housing authorities.

As a regional parks authority the Council maintains 47 parks and open spaces covering around 2,200 hectares (5,500 acres). It does a great deal to give them colour and animation; arranges an extensive programme of entertainment each year; and caters for almost every game and sport. For children in particular there are playparks, playgrounds, summer shows and zoos. At Crystal Palace alongside the Council's 70-acre park is the National Sports Centre, owned by the Council and managed by the Sports Council.

The Council is also a land drainage authority for a large part of Greater London and has Thames flood prevention powers along about 120 miles of riverbank. Temporary protection against tidal flooding to the low-lying central areas of London has been provided by a limited raising of the level of the river walls. Permanent protection is now under construction in the form of a permanent flood barrier across the Thames in the Silvertown area, coupled with further raising of the downstream flood defences to give equivalent protection.

As refuse disposal authority for the whole of the Greater London area the Council deals with almost 3 million tons of solid wastes each year. About 84% goes to landfill sites for land reclamation and the rest is incinerated. Of the refuse transported to landfill sites about one quarter is taken by barge, the remainder by road and rail. The Edmonton incineration plant in North London accounts for all but about 2% of the incinerated element and produces electricity for sale to the Eastern Electricity Board.

The Council is responsible for providing the fire service for Greater London which is amongst the largest in the world. The London Fire Brigade has an authorized strength of 6,458 uniformed men, 114 stations and 2 river stations with some 605 fire fighting appliance vehicles and fireboats.

The Council is the licensing authority in Greater London for certain places of entertainment, betting tracks and petroleum installations and, as agent for the Department of the Environment, licenses motor vehicles.

Other responsibilities and services of the Council include an intelligence unit for Greater London; scientific, purchase and supplies services; the Royal Festival Hall, Queen Elizabeth Hall, Purcell Room and Hayward Gallery on the South Bank of the Thames near Waterloo Bridge; certain courts and judicial services; preservation of historic buildings; street naming; Iveagh Bequest, Kenwood; Marble Hill House, Twickenham; the "Roman" Bath in Strand Lane; Cleopatra's Needle on the Thames Embankment; Eros in Piccadilly, and Lesnes Abbey in Abbey Woods, Erith.

The Greater London Council's budget for 1977–78 (including London Transport Executive) amounts to £2,063 million of which £1,627 million is revenue expenditure (including £503 million for the Inner London Education Authority) and £436 million capital expenditure (£22 million for the inner London Education Authority).

Revenue expenditure during the year will be met by precept on the London Borough Councils (£773 million); income from loan repayments, rents, reimbursements for town developments, fees, etc. (£360 million); London Transport fares, etc. (£316 million) and by Exchequer grants for certain works and services (£178 million). The Inner London Education Authority determines the amount the council must precept on the rating authorities in Inner London for education purposes.

Capital expenditure is met principally by external borrowing.

THE INNER LONDON EDUCATION AUTHORITY

The ILEA is responsible for the education service provided in the 12 inner London boroughs and the City of London. It is a special committee of the GLC special in the sense that it is virtually autonomous. In practice the GLC and the ILEA work closely together.

The Authority consists of 48 members, 35 of whom are members of the Greater London Council elected for the inner London boroughs. The remaining 13 comprise representatives for each of the 12 inner London borough councils and of the Common Council for the City of London.

The ILEA operates through an Education Committee consisting of the 48 members of the Authority together with 17 other people experienced in education. Five of these additional members are serving teachers with the Authority.

The detailed work of the Education Committee is done through five sub committees: Development; Finance; Further and Higher Education; Schools; Staff and General.

The central offices are at County Hall and the Authority is organized in 12 administrative branches 10 divisional offices situated in the boroughs the Inspectorate and the Education Welfare Service. Of the administrative branches, five manage sectors of the service—primary schools secondary schools special education, further and higher education, community education and careers. The remaining six provide specialist help for the management branches, schools and colleges Development and Equipment Education Catering Service, Establishments (dealing with non-teaching staff) Finance, External Relations, Teaching Staff, and Learning Resources.

The Chief Inspector is responsible for a team of 103 inspectors and also for the schools psychological service.

During 1977-78 the ILEA's net revenue expenditure will be £431,244 000 capital expenditure £21 000,000. The GLC makes rate precepts and raises loans on behalf of the ILEA.

The Authority employs 24,000 school teachers and caters for almost 400 000 children in about 1 200 schools.

The Authority's education welfare service assists in promoting the welfare of school children and families in difficulties so that children are able to take maximum advantage of education facilities. It has an important responsibility for ensuring school attendance. The EWS works in co-operation with other statutory and voluntary welfare agencies.

The ILEA Careers Service gives guidance to pupils and students in schools colleges or polytechnics to help them decide on a career and to find suitable employment training and further education. Careers Officers work closely with teachers, parents and employers. They follow up the progress of young people after they have entered employment, and assist young workers to find new jobs during the early years of their careers. More than 60,000 vocational guidance interviews are given each year.

The Authority either aids or maintains 37 colleges (including five polytechnics and five colleges of education) attended by over 200,000 students. A wide range of courses is provided in colleges of further and higher education schools of art, specialist colleges polytechnics and other aided colleges, and colleges engaged in the training of teachers. The courses prepare students for a great variety of careers in science technology business art and design, education the social sciences and other fields and range from general and non-examination courses to craft and technician qualifications, degrees and post-graduate qualifications and research. There has also been an increase in lower level courses for less qualified young people aged between 12 and 21. The authority has 77 youth centres, 29 youth clubs two boating centres, a water pursuits centre and other projects. It also gives considerable assistance—about £3 000 000 a year—to many voluntary youth organizations. About 300 000 people attend the authority's 30 adult education institutes for day and evening classes ranging from art and crafts, literacy, sport, and drama to music literature, modern languages and current affairs.

Constitution

The Corporation of London is unique among municipalities for its constitution, its 800 years of history and its somewhat exceptional powers and activities. The City—known as the Square Mile—is a county in itself, and the Corporation has many of the functions of a County Council.

The legal definition of the City Corporation is "The Mayor and Commonalty and Citizens of the City of London". It is governed by the Court of Common Council, which consists of the Lord Mayor, 24 Aldermen and 139 Common Councilmen. The Common Council is not merely a deliberative body: it is also a legislative assembly and can remodel its own constitution. It has no party politics. The Lord Mayor is nominated by the livery voters of the City Guilds and elected by the Court of Aldermen. Aldermen are elected by those eligible to vote in the several Wards, who also annually elect Common Councilmen.

Committees

Like Borough Councils, Common Council works through Committees, some of which consist of four Aldermen and 29 Commoners, others have 2 Aldermen and 15 Commoners, the former being nominated by the Court of Aldermen, the latter by members of the 25 Wards. Each committee member serves for four years. The 350-year-old Committee, now known as the City Lands and Bridge House Estates Committee, is regarded as the premier Committee, and its chairman is designated Chief Commoner. It manages the lands and buildings belonging to the Corporation (with certain exceptions).

Revenue from the City's Estate is known as City's Cash, and out of it certain expenses of civic government are paid with no charge to the ratepayer. Out of the revenue of the Bridge House Estates, four Thames bridges (London, Southwark, Blackfriars and Tower Bridge) are maintained and rebuilt when necessary. The new London Bridge was completed in 1973.

The Coal, Corn and Rates Finance Committee is the finance committee of the Corporation, comparable to the finance committee of a county council. There are separate committees for the Barbican Development, Schools, Epping Forest and Open Spaces, General Purposes, Housing, Libraries, Planning and Communications, Markets, Museum of London, Music, Police, Health, etc. The Policy and Parliamentary Committee (created in 1966) co-ordinates, and is responsible for public relations.

Planning, Development and Housing

The Second World War destroyed 104 acres of buildings completely, and 121 acres partially. This fact, together with a positive development policy, has enabled the Corporation to implement some highly imaginative planning proposals. Among them are the Paternoster development to the north and east of St Paul's Cathedral, the North Bank Scheme and the revolutionary Barbican Development in which, for the first time on such a scale, vehicles and pedestrians are segregated by walkways. The 35-acre Barbican was conceived, from 1957 onwards, as "a genuine residential neighbourhood incorporating schools, shops, open spaces and other amenities". This "Living City" contains 2,014 flats, maisonettes and terrace houses for up to 6,500 residents, a 200-room hostel for young City workers, and parking for 2,500 cars. Much of this has already been realized; the Guildhall School of Music and Drama is the latest part to be completed and the remainder of the ambitious Arts Centre (comprising a theatre, conference/concert hall, art gallery, lending library, cinema) is programmed for completion in 1979.

As a housing authority, the Corporation has provided or has under construction 2,626 houses and flats (not all of them in the City area) including special accommodation for old people.

Education

Four schools (three of them actually in the "Square Mile") are run by the Corporation. The City of London School, a leading public day school for boys opened in 1837, stands on the Victoria Embankment, Blackfriars, and it is planned to move into new riverside buildings directly below St Paul's as part of the North Bank Development. The City of London School for Girls (also an independent day school), opened in 1894, is now in the heart of the new Barbican. The City of London Freemen's School (opened at Brixton in 1854, and now at Ashtead, Surrey) is co-educational and caters for both day-pupils and boarders. The Corporation awards a number of scholarships each year in open competition at all three schools.

The Guildhall School of Music and Drama, founded by the Corporation in 1880 as Britain's first municipal school of music, is now of university status and is the only school in England and Wales which treats music and drama as equal partners. The School has now moved into its new home in the Barbican Arts Centre and the City now has this century's first purpose-built School of Music and Drama with 2,000 students and shortly will have the great advantage of proximity to the Royal Shakespeare Company and the London Symphony Orchestra.

In Common with the Inner London Boroughs the City contributes towards the funds of the Inner London Education Authority. The City's contribution for the year 1977–78 is estimated to amount to £84,000,000.

The Gresham Trust, administered jointly by the Corporation and the Mercers' Company, is devoted to the maintenance of the Royal Exchange and Gresham College, and seven Gresham Professors are elected annually to deliver lectures in Music, Divinity, Geometry, Astronomy, Law, Physics and Rhetoric to students and members of the public at the City University, which was inaugurated in 1966 with the Lord Mayor as Chancellor.

Libraries

The Guildhall Libraries, Museum and Art Gallery are in the care of the Library Committee. The Library, which dates back to 1828 is one of the leading public reference libraries in the country, with 150,000 books, 80,000 manuscripts and 60,000 prints and maps (many of them on the history and development of London) as well as the special libraries of the Worshipful Companies of Gardeners, Fletchers and Clockmakers, and the Exhibition of clocks and watches belonging to the last-named. The City Business Library in Basinghall Street, with its special material of financial, economic and statistical interest, meets the day-to-day needs of the City's business community.

The St. Bride Printing Library (off Fleet Street), with over 30,000 books and pamphlets and 5,000 sets of periodicals, is internationally recognized as a major source of information on the development of printing techniques and type design. A collection of early presses and types is displayed in an adjacent room.

City residents, workers and students are served by the Bishopsgate, Cannon Street, Cripplegate and St. Bride Lending Libraries. Special collections include loan material on finance, banking and City history. A further lending library, to include a music and gramophone library, has been planned as part of the Barbican Arts Centre. The Corporation of London Records Office contains the finest collection of municipal archives in the country, spanning nine centuries from William the Conqueror's Charter to the present day.

The Museum of London (formed by amalgamating Guildhall Museum and the London Museum) was opened by H.M. The Queen in December 1976. The new Museum presents the biography of the whole London area and is a centre for London studies at all levels. It is financed and supported equally by the State (DES), the Corporation of London and the Greater London Council. The building, adjoining the Barbican, at the corner of Aldersgate Street and London Wall includes 50,000 sq. ft. of gallery space, a separate education wing, study facilities, a shop and restaurants.

The Art Gallery (established 1886 but temporarily closed) has a permanent collection of pictures by Lely, Reynolds, Constable, Brangwyn, Lawrence, Fantin-Latour and Millais (many are of London interests) and also holds exhibitions, among them the Lord Mayor's Art Award Exhibition (for amateurs and professionals living or working in the City).

Open Spaces

Epping Forest, Burnham Beeches, Coulsdon Commons, West Wickham Common, Spring Park, Highgate Wood Queens Park (Kilburn) and parks at Wanstead and West Ham, are open spaces (most of them in the Green Belt) acquired by the Corporation and maintained for the enjoyment of Londoners and the conservation of wild life. In June 1971 a Conservation Centre, run by the Field Studies Council, was opened at High Beech, Epping Forest. More than eighty small open spaces are cared for by the Corporation of London within the Square Mile of the City. Many of these are tiny – just a tree and a couple of seats providing an oasis among concrete office blocks and busy streets.

Councils

Markets

The Corporation is the market authority for the City. Billingsgate Market handles 250 tons of fish a day. Leadenhall Market has 70 shops, mostly retailing food. Spitalfields (just beyond the City boundary), with a main frontage of over $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles, accommodates 150 wholesalers of fruit, vegetables and flowers. The London Central Markets (Smithfield) is the world's largest market for dead meat, poultry and provisions, covering 10 acres and handling 253,000 tons of produce annually.

Police

The City has its own police force, originating from the 13th-century Watch and Ward which manned the City's walls against attack. A mobile force with excellent communications, it has pioneered crime prevention techniques by day and night, controlling the security of 48 miles of streets and offices. A specialist Fraud Department deals with company fraud.

Health

Both the City and the Port of London are the responsibility of the Health Department under the Medical Officer of Health. This includes 90 miles of the Thames and its estuary, and (for veterinary control of imported animals) the whole of Greater London including London Airport. A Port Health Quarantine Service is maintained 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, with a doctor always on duty. It is in touch with all other port health officers in the United Kingdom and abroad, and has 3 "ambulance" launches patrolling the river and estuary. The Chief Port Health Inspector and his staff examine about three million tons of imported foodstuffs annually, follow up cases of infectious disease, inspect ships' hygiene and supervise rodent control.

The Chief City Environmental Health Officer and his staff supervise food hygiene in shops and catering establishments in the City; inspect offices, control noise and other nuisances, and have fought a pioneering battle for clean air; the Corporation of London was the first local authority to make its whole area smoke-free in 1955.

The Chief Environmental Health Officer (Smithfield) is responsible for food hygiene in the whole of Smithfield Market. A highly specialized staff is needed for this work, the benefit of which is felt far beyond the City boundaries.

Social Services

The Social Services Department has a responsibility for the welfare of the aged, handicapped and sick and for others in need.

The services provided include, mobile meals, library services for the housebound, help in the home and aids for those who require special help. Where necessary help is given with the payment of telephone rentals and television licences and free bus permits for pensioners are issued.

The department is also responsible for providing social work support to the medical, surgical and psychiatric wards and clinics at St. Bartholemew's and St. Mark's Hospitals.

* At present approximately 335,000 enter the City daily to work.

GUIDE TO THE ANNUAL ELECTION OF THE LORD MAYOR

The Lord Mayor of London is at the top of an electoral tree which is as strange and as ancient as any in the whole of the United Kingdom, and indeed in the world, and he is not elected on politcal grounds. He will always previously have been a Sheriff of the City of London (there are two Sheriffs), and is nominated by the Aldermen of the City, and elected by the Livery of the City.

Every Lord Mayor is groomed for the post for many years, and will have stood in line with other men grooming for office; each Lord Mayor spends a considerable personal fortune on his civic duties, for although the upkeep of the official seat, the Mansion House, and various ceremonies are met out of City's Cash, there are a considerable variety of things for which he pays out of his own purse. While in office for one year, no longer, he will entertain presidents, prime ministers and monarchs from abroad as part of his duties.

The diagram overleaf shows a simplified scheme of the nominating and electoral process for the office of Lord Mayor. The Livery, or Liverymen, are members of the City Livery Companies or ancient craft guilds which still flourish today, and of which there are 90. Like the concept of City of London business itself, the Livery is not geographically confined to those who live or work within the Square Mile, but is spread throughout the country. A Liveryman is not necessarily attached to an industrial or commercial descendant or branch of the Livery company concerned, but several companies do emphasize their history. The Worshipful Company of Needlemakers is an instance.

The other line of ascent in the diagram is the City electoral register. This includes the permanent residents of the City, and also City workers who occupy premises within the City as tenants or owners. There are 25 electoral wards in the City, and each year they elect members to the Court of Common Council—elections in the City are known as Wardmotes, and the elected member is known as a Common Councilman (man or woman), not a Councillor. The Common Council sits at Guildhall every third Thursday to vote on civic affairs, and the debates are open to the public. The electors on the electoral register also elect Aldermen of the City—once an Alderman, always an Alderman, until you resign, do something dishonourable or die. Vacancies are filled when they occur.

THE LIVERY COMPANIES OF THE CITY OF LONDON

Like so many institutions in the City, the origin of the Companies is lost in antiquity, but in all probability they derive from the early mediaeval religious fraternities which were attached to many of the parish churches. In the middle ages it was customary for people working in the same trade to live in the same area, so that members of these fraternities were for the most part engaged in the same trade or craft. The main functions of the fraternities were originally religious and benevolent, but in the 12th century they began to be more concerned with the protection and regulation of their trades. So emerged the trade and craft guilds. These were more than mere trade associations, however; they united within themselves some of the basic functions of the modern trade unions, employers' associations, insurance and mutual benefit societies and social clubs. Over all these functions remained the religious aspect inherited from the fraternities, an inheritance which has never entirely been lost to the present day. The guilds gradually obtained complete control of their trades—a control for which they fought for centuries to maintain. With the development of industry and commerce both at home and abroad, the power of the companies began to wane and by the late 18th and early 19th centuries only a few of them had much direct connection with their trades. There are still, however, today a few which continue to have certain controlling powers within their trades, for example the Goldsmiths, Fishmongers and Gunmakers; the others for the most part concerning themselves, as far as their trades are concerned, with providing educational courses and fostering technical research. The fraternal element is still active in the maintenance of almshouses, poor relief and other work. The craftguilds came to be called livery companies during the late 15th century, from the custom originating in the 14th century for the more prosperous members of a company to wear a distinctive clothing or livery on ceremonial occasions. From the early 14th century the only persons entitled to call themselves "citizens" were those who were members, or "freemen" as they were called, of the craft guilds (livery companies) and until 1835 the freedom of the City could be obtained only through such companies.

In mediaeval times the whole body of citizens, that is freemen, had the right to attend at Guildhall to elect the Sheriffs and the Mayor. By the mid-14th century, however, some restriction had to be placed on the number attending. This was done by allowing only the more prosperous freemen to take part in the elections. This led finally in 1475 to only those who wore the "livery" of a Company being entitled to elect the Mayor and the Sheriffs. This right of the liverymen has continued to the present day.

Until the Reform Act of 1832, the liverymen had the sole right of electing members of parliament for the City. The Reform Act preserved this right but also enfranchised certain house holders and occupiers in the City. Nearly a hundred years later the right of liverymen as such to exercise the parliamentary franchise in the City was abolished by the Representation of the People Act 1918 but the Act allowed those liverymen who also possessed a business qualification to vote as liverymen, if they so desired. This latter privilege was abolished by the Representation of the People Act 1948.

Although many of their rights have gone liverymen continue to play an important part in the government of the City. They still have the right to elect the Lord Mayor on Michaelmas Day, and the Sheriffs and various officers, including the Chamberlain of London on Midsummer Day; furthermore most members of the Court of Common Council are liverymen.

The constitution of a livery company is the same today as it has been for centuries There are three ranks of membership namely freemen, liverymen and assistants. A person can become a freeman by one of three ways (a) by patrimony that is through the father of the applicant having been a freeman before the son or daughter was born (b) by servitude that is through having served a period of at least four years as an apprentice to a freeman, and (c) by redemption that is by purchase Election to the livery is the prerogative of the company who can elect any of its freemen to this status Assistants are usually elected from the livery and form a Court of Assistants which is the governing body of the company From the Court of Assistants are elected annually the Master (sometimes called Prime Warden) and the Wardens

The Borough (which comprises the major portions of the former Boroughs of Barking and Dagenham) lies on the north side of the River Thames, astride the main London-Tilbury Road.

It is primarily residential and industrial in character, Barking Power Station and the Ford Motor Company, two very large undertakings, are situated in the southern part of the Borough and there are various engineering, chemical, paint, wood and miscellaneous works elsewhere. Nearly three-quarters of the Becontree Estate, two-thirds of which is still owned by the Greater London Council, and the largest municipal housing estate of its kind in the country, lies within the Borough. There are other large estates owned by the Borough Council, two of which are served by a district heating scheme utilizing waste heat from a refuse incineration plant, supplemented by low grade fuel.

The total area of parks and open spaces maintained by the Council amounts to 584 acres. Refuse is collected by direct labour and disposal is undertaken by the Greater London Council. There are thirteen public halls in the Borough, one of which is capable of seating 800 persons, and the Council operate a civic catering undertaking. Provision by the Social Services Department includes an adult training centre, sheltered workshops, 2 hostels for the mentally handicapped and a day centre for the mentally ill, 5 children's homes, a reception centre and a hostel for girls and day centres and homes for the elderly and the physically handicapped.

Advances under the Housing Acts are available for house purchase subject to financial restrictions.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The London Borough of Bexley, one of the twenty Outer Boroughs of the Greater London area, is made up of the former Boroughs of Bexley and Erith, the Urban District of Crayford and part of the Urban District of Chislehurst and Sidcup.

The area is rich in historical interest. For example, records of the locality within the Borough known as Bexley, date back to AD 814 when Kenulph, King of the Mercians, in a Charter, granted the Parish of Bexley to Wulfred, Archbishop of Canterbury.

The Borough has a substantial housing and development programme, much of which is already taking place and the remainder scheduled for the near future. Many internationally known firms have works in Bexley and there are three main industrial areas, at Erith, Crayford and Sidcup as well as a developing industrial area at Thamesmead. In Erith, on the site of a new town centre, work on the shopping area has been completed and many shop units are in occupation.

The Council has put in hand a substantial reorganization of its departmental structure and flowing from this has centralized many of its departments in new offices on the site of the former Council Offices in Broadway, Bexleyheath. The Council is also pursuing with the approved developer the redevelopment of Bexleyheath Central Shopping Area as soon as possible, and as part of the redevelopment of Bexleyheath a new Magistrates Court has now been opened.

Major improvements in road communications, either in hand or planned for the not too distant future, include various widening schemes. The building of a flyover as part of the Thamesmead road building programme was completed in November 1976 and a proposal is programmed for the near future to construct another bridge over the railway at the eastern end of Thamesmead to link it to the existing highway network south of the railway.

Part of the impressive Thamesmead undertaking falls within the Borough and work is well advanced on the 5,000 dwellings which are to be built in the Bexley sector. Thamesmead's residents, at present numbering around 14,000, are already served by several shops and a supermarket. They have their own tenants' clubroom, a club for the elderly, four new primary schools, a secondary school, a youth centre and a library. Three further primary schools are planned to meet expanding population needs in 1979 and the construction of a new junior department to the secondary school has now been completed. There is a man-made lake specially designed for recreational purposes and adjacent to the lake there is a purpose-built health centre.

Recreational facilities in Bexley include three indoor swimming baths at Bexleyheath, Erith and Sidcup and two outdoor pools at Danson Park, Bexleyheath and Martens Grove, Barnehurst, as well as a sports stadium at Erith. In addition there are approximately 1,200 acres of parks and open spaces.

DEFINITION OF AREA

Bromley is the largest in area of the 32 Boroughs created under the London Government Act 1963, amalgamating the former Boroughs of Beckenham and Bromley, the Urban Districts of Orpington and Penge and that part of the Chislehurst and Sidcup Urban District south of the A20 road.

An open-air market is held in Bromley each Thursday, the market rights, owned by the Council, having been granted under a Charter dated 1205. Another market, held more frequently, is at Maple Road, Penge.

Bromley is a County Court Circuit: it contains the petty sessional Division of Bromley, and is in the Metropolitan Police District.

The London Borough is a constituent authority of the T.W.A. for sewerage within its area.

Extending from Penge southwards to the ridge of the North Downs Bromley provides not only urban facilities but also the amenities of the countryside.

Although predominantly residential, small belts of light industry are located in various parts of the Borough, which has up-to-date shopping thoroughfares and modern business premises. The Council is the Local Planning Authority and now that the Greater London Council Strategic Development Plan has been approved by the Secretary of State for the Environment, the local development plan for the borough is being prepared.

The district offers its residents excellent facilities for all kinds of indoor and outdoor recreation including a first class theatre.

The south and south-eastern parts of the Borough are mainly agricultural and included within this area of Metropolitan Green Belt are three large agricultural estates, comprising approximately 1,500 acres, owned by the Council, and let out to tenant farmers and Biggin Hill Civil Airport.

Hayes and Keston Commons, within the Borough, are owned and controlled by the Corporation. In addition there are Commons at Chislehurst, St. Paul's Cray and West Wickham. The Crystal Palace Grounds are also within the district, although administered by the Greater London Council.

The public has access to National Trust Property at Chislehurst and Petts Wood.

Mayoral annual allowance: £6,450.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The London Borough of Croydon, created in 1965, consists of the former County Borough of Croydon (created in 1889 in succession to the Municipal Borough incorporated in 1883) and the former Urban District of Coulsdon and Purley (created in 1915). The Council are Lords of the Manor of Coulsdon.

Croydon is one of the largest towns in the South of England with the largest population of all the London Boroughs; within its boundaries are Addington, Addiscombe, Coulsdon, Kenley, New Addington, Norbury, Purley, Sanderstead, Selsdon, Shirley, South Norwood, Thornton Heath, Upper Norwood, Waddon and Woodside. There are 415 miles of public roads in the Borough.

Large scale redevelopment has taken place in the central shopping and business area. The central shopping area is regarded as the leading centre in the South of England outside the West End.

Central Croydon is also one of the largest office centres in the country. About 40,000 new office jobs have been provided since the war.

Around Park Lane is an area of Council civic development including Fairfield Halls (an arts and entertainment centre including a theatre, concert hall and art gallery), the Croydon College of Design and Technology and the Law Courts. The Council's administrative offices are centred in Taberner House, a 21-storey building close to the old Town Hall.

The Council has in progress a continuing programme of building works of dwellings and schools.

Major main drainage works have been carried out in the central area and substantial schemes are in hand elsewhere to cater for new development and flood relief.

The Council's total housing stock is 21,750 dwellings, of which 16,416 dwellings have been provided since 1945. The largest housing estate is at New Addington, comprising 6,199 council houses and 1,061 privately-owned dwellings, 15 schools, 1 central and 3 estate shopping centres, 4 churches, a public swimming bath, children's homes, an old people's home, public library, clinic, fire station, area offices for social services and two community centres; there is also an industrial estate.

Public parks and open spaces within the Borough cover 2,690 acres. A complete Sports Arena, a separate comprehensive Sports Centre, a Corporation-owned Public Golf Course and 18-hole pitch and putt course, are provided. There are several privately owned golf courses, and 121 acres of permanent allotments. A further 420 acres are owned and maintained by the City of London Corporation. Selsdon Woods (200-acre nature reserve) is National Trust owned, leased to the Council and jointly managed.

Education is provided to approximately 57,000 pupils in schools of which the County Secondary Schools were reorganized on Comprehensive lines in September 1971. Croydon College has about 11,000 students.

DEFINITION OF AREA

Greenwich is one of the 12 Inner London boroughs constituted under the London Government Act 1963. The borough comprises the districts of Charlton, Eltham, Greenwich, New Eltham, Plumstead, Woolwich and parts of Abbey Wood, Blackheath, Mottingham and Thamesmead.

It has a river frontage of nearly 9 miles and is exceptionally well endowed with public open spaces which cover some 1,750 acres of common land, woodlands, formal parks and playing fields.

In the north-eastern sector of the borough, partly on land formerly occupied by the Royal Arsenal, the new community of "Thamesmead" is being developed by the Greater London Council in co-operation with the London Boroughs of Bexley and Greenwich. This imaginative and extensive planning project includes facilities for water sports and a marina, and will ultimately provide new housing for a total population of 45–48,000 with supporting social services and amenities.

Education in Greenwich is the responsibility of the Inner London Education Authority. (See Inner London Education Authority.)

Greenwich is known internationally as the centre of world time and is rich in historical associations. Within its boundaries lie the Royal Naval College: the National Maritime Museum which includes the Old Royal Observatory and Planetarium; the "Cutty Sark", "Gipsy Moth IV"; Eltham Palace; the headquarters of the Royal Artillery (Woolwich Garrison) and the former Royal Military Academy; the Rotunda Museum; Tudor Barn at Well Hall; and Charlton House—a stately and well preserved Jacobean mansion.

Under the Civic Amenities Act 1967 ten areas of the borough have been designated as Conservation Areas.

The Council provides amenities by way of both recreational facilities and entertainment and maintains seven centres for community activities.

As part of a comprehensive welfare scheme the Council owns sea-front hotels at Westgate-on-Sea and Eastbourne to provide assisted holidays for elderly Greenwich residents.

Hammersmith is one of the 12 inner London Boroughs and was formed in 1965 by the amalgamation of the former Metropolitan Boroughs of Fulham and Hammersmith.

The main administrative offices are at the Town Hall, King Street. Nearest underground station, Ravenscourt Park. This building houses the departments of the Chief Executive, the Director of Finance, the Director of Development Planning, the Director of Engineering, the Director of Operations. The offices of the Director of Leisure and Recreation and Principal Media Officer are located at 181–187 King Street, adjacent to the Town Hall. The Housing Department is located at the Housing Centre, Glenthorne Road, a few minutes away while the Borough Solicitor, the Borough Valuer, the Director of Employees' Services and Personnel Staff are in the BOC offices near Hammersmith Broadway. The Registrar for Hammersmith is in Nigel Playfair Avenue, W6. Other offices, principally those of the Social Services, are at the old Town Hall, Fulham.

Although small compared with most other London Boroughs, Hammersmith is densely populated and has two Parliamentary constituencies: Hammersmith North and Hammersmith Fulham. The Council comprises fifty alderman and 60 councillors. The Borough has two representatives on the Greater London Council.

Hammersmith contains within its boundaries three Football League Clubs—more than any other borough in Britain—Chelsea, Fulham and Queen's Park Rangers. It also has six famous hospitals—Hammersmith, West London, The Royal Masonic, Charing Cross (Fulham), Queen Charlotte's Maternity and the Western Hospital, Seagrave Road.

It has 15 secondary and 46 primary schools, which come under the control of the Inner London Education Authority.

DEFINITION OF AREA

Created a London Borough in 1965, Haringey comprises the former Boroughs of Hornsey, Tottenham and Wood Green. The place name Haringey has been part of Hornsey and Tottenham since the 13th century.

Haringey, largely residential, also contains some light industry, principally in Tottenham, where the largest offset duplicator factory in the world is situated. Main industries are Engineering, and Children's clothing.

Tottenham also contains Bruce Castle, where King David I of Scotland lived for a period, Harringay Stadium and the famous Tottenham Hotspur Football Club. Bruce Castle, also a museum, contains a wealth of archive material and a fine military section. Tottenham includes about 5 square miles of the River Lea Valley now being developed as a regional recreation centre. Although a built-up area it has retained its distinctive character.

Hornsey, mainly residential, which includes Highgate, Muswell Hill and Crouch End, lies about 5 miles north of the River Thames in the Northern Heights of London. Many of its roads are tree-lined and attractive wayside gardens are a noticeable feature, along with several fine large open spaces, including Finsbury Park, Highgate and Queens Woods.

Wood Green is already an important shopping and service centre for North London which is expanding to provide a wider range of facilities. This expansion is being carried out as a series of integrated projects which have now reached the implementation stage. The projects should improve the local amenities and ratepayers will benefit from the income new commerce will bring, both by way of increased rateable value and by sharing the income. Many of its pleasant streets climb to the breezy heights of Alexandra Palace, the playground of North London and for many years the home of the BBC Television News. The Palace in recent years has rapidly developed as a popular exhibition and conference centre. Wood Green contains the administrative centre of the Borough. The former administrative centres at Hornsey and Tottenham Town Halls now house other Corporation Services.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The London Borough of Havering comprises the former Borough of Romford and the Urban District of Hornchurch and is the second largest of the London Boroughs, with a frontage of 3½ miles to the River Thames.

The Council owns and controls community centres, purpose-built youth centres, allotments, 10 libraries, 3 public swimming pools and over 1,600 acres of parks and open spaces providing facilities for a variety of sports. The Council also maintains a civic theatre—the original Queen's was opened in 1953. A new theatre was opened in April 1975.

The Borough is mainly residential but small belts of light industry are located in various parts.

Extensive redevelopment of the centre of Romford has taken place. The construction of a ring road has provided an extensive pedestrian precinct, which includes a 9-acre scheme of new and multiple shops. Car parking capacity exceeds 3,500 with 3 multi-storey parks.

There has been an official Market in Romford since the year 1247. Originally for the sale of cattle, leather and farm produce, it became more general in character and is now held on Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays. The Market has been under the control of the Local Authority since 1892. A new speciality and antiques market was opened in 1977.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The Borough came into being on 1st April 1965 and embraces the areas of the former Borough of Uxbridge, and the former Urban Districts of Hayes and Harlington, Ruislip/Northwood and Yiewsley and West Drayton.

The Borough is approximately 14 miles west of Marble Arch and is bounded by the counties of Hertfordshire, Buckinghamshire and Surrey and by the London Boroughs of Harrow, Ealing and Hounslow.

Many parts of the Borough were mentioned in the Domesday Book and the area has several historic buildings—amongst them the Jacobean Mansion "Swakeleys" at Ickenham. It was from the underground control centre at RAF Uxbridge that the Battle of Britain was largely directed.

In addition Hillingdon has many modern industries of a national and international character, for instance Heinz and EMI. Almost the whole of Heathrow Airport London lies within the Borough's southern boundary and Brunel University is at Uxbridge.

The Borough is fortunate too in having large tracts of green belt, parks and open space, including Ruislip Lido, amounting to over 12,000 acres in all.

Mayoral annual allowance: £6,250.

DEFINITION OF AREA

On 1st April, 1965, the former Boroughs of Brentford and Chiswick, and of Heston and Isleworth, and the former Urban District of Feltham were merged to form this London Borough.

Hounslow is an attractive Borough of contrasts—from the industrial-trading complexes of Feltham and the Great West Road to the quiet secluded riverside communities of Chiswick and Strand-on-the-Green.

One of the major Boroughs of outer London, it stretches from Hammersmith in the east to Heathrow Airport in the west and from the M4 motorway in the north to the Richmond and Sunbury borders to the south.

The Council is noted for its comprehensive Social Services. The Mental Health Services have been well-developed, providing a hostel and home for the mentally handicapped, a day centre for the elderly confused and an adult training centre. 1971 saw the opening of a rehabilitation centre for the mentally ill. In addition, excellent residential and day care facilities are provided for the elderly, physically handicapped and young children.

The Authority is the first in London to introduce catenary street lighting—a system proved more effective than other forms of street lighting.

Isleworth riverside, Strand-on-the-Green and an area around Chiswick House have been declared Conservation Areas, thereby protecting the picturesque character of these districts. Further conservation schemes are under consideration.

Besides providing several of the main shopping and residential areas of West London, the Borough has a number of notable houses of architectural and historical merit—Syon House, Osterley House, Boston Manor House, Chiswick House, Hogarth's House and Gunnersbury House.

There are some 80 parks and open spaces together with six swimming baths—including an open-air pool at Chiswick and a covered pool at Feltham. Facilities are provided for a comprehensive swimming instruction programme, diving, sub-aqua, and for major competitive swimming clubs. There are sauna suites at Feltham and Isleworth baths. The Feltham suite has a relaxation lounge and exercise room, and mixed sauna sessions were introduced in March, 1976.

There are 91 schools in the Borough—66 primary, 16 secondary, 7 special, 1 higher educational and 1 further educational. There is also a new community school at Cranford.

An additional feature to the established services of the Council is the setting-up of an Advice Centre in the old Hounslow Town Hall. Services include Citizens' Advice Bureau, Community Relations, Education Reading Centre, Housing Aid Centre, Registrar, Rent Officer Service and the Volunteer Service.

The community is well served by the three district libraries and eight branch libraries, and the museums at Gunnersbury and Hogarth's Houses are popular attractions.

Hounslow Cavalry Barracks—once the headquarters of Southern Command—now houses the West London Administrative Staff. In late 1979 a battalion of the Household Division from Windsor is expected to be resident there.

Mayoral annual allowance: £3,000.

DEFINITION OF AREA

This Inner London Borough was created under the London Government Act 1963, by the amalgamation of the former Metropolitan Boroughs of Finsbury and Islington: it lies with Haringey to the North, Camden and Hackney to the West and East, and the City of London to the South.

The area has strong historical traditions connected with entertainment, light engineering and education (particularly technology). Sadlers Wells, the internationally known home of opera and ballet, is in the southern part of the Borough; nearby is the site of the once-famous Collins Music Hall. Light industry and craft work, such as clock-making and jewellery, are firmly established in Clerkenwell. The interests of education are strongly represented by a number of Further Education establishments, such as the City University and the Polytechnic of North London.

St. John's Gate, at Clerkenwell, is one of the oldest surviving buildings in the Borough. A beautiful early 16th century structure amid modern surroundings, it houses a collection of silver, paintings and furniture illustrating all periods of the history of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem. For those who prefer their works of art to carry a price-ticket, Camden Passage (off Islington High Street) is a world-famous antiques centre housing over sixty elegant shops; an open-air market is held every Wednesday and Saturday.

Football enthusiasts are well served in Islington; Arsenal Stadium, at Highbury, is the home of the Arsenal Football Club. In November, 1971, the Council installed Europe's first full-size artificial turf football pitch at Caledonian Park; used for over 1,000 games per year, it has changing-room facilities for both male and female players.

The south of the Borough is predominantly commercial and industrial in character, with a small residential population, while the northern part is mainly residential. Due to the proximity of Main Line railway termini and work centres, the Borough is densely occupied and one of the major problems facing the Council is that of dealing with housing conditions. As at April 1978 there were 2,031 new homes in course of construction and 1,494 substandard dwellings were undergoing rehabilitation.

Due to intensive building development over the past 150 years, Islington is sadly deficient in open space; although immediately adjoining are large open areas at Waterlow Park, Clissold Park and Finsbury Park. Open space provision within the Borough itself consists mainly of Highbury Fields, the recently extended Barnard Park, and a charming linear park called New River Walk, some 1½ miles long; there are, also, many small and pleasant squares.

Advisory Health Circles for the elderly are in operation and a Smoking Advisory Clinic is held.

An allowance of £4,660 per annum is made to the Mayor.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The borough, brought into being in April 1965, embraces Kingston upon Thames, Kingston Vale, Coombe, New Malden, Old Malden, Berrylands, Kingston Hill, Norbiton, Surbiton, Tolworth, Hook and Chessington.

A pleasant residential area with the amenities of the Thames and splendid open parklands close at hand, and within easy reach of Central London, it is also a thriving commercial and shopping centre, and supports a number of light industries.

Kingston and the surrounding area is rich in history. Many royal charters, dating from 1208, are in the possession of the Council, and the Coronation Stone believed to have been used at the crowning of seven Anglo-Saxon Kings, is displayed beside the Guildhall. Nearby stands the 12th Century Clattern Bridge spanning the Hogsmill River, and the Market, which has existed from at least the 13th century.

Recreation facilities are provided by 692 acres of public parks and open spaces, three golf courses leased by the Council to private clubs, an open-air swimming pool and two heated indoor swimming pools. A number of organizations have private sports grounds in the area.

Education is provided by 2 nursery schools, 43 primary schools, 13 secondary schools, one school for educationally sub-normal pupils, one school for severely sub-normal children, and one school for physically handicapped pupils, Kingston College of Further Education and the Kingston Polytechnic. In addition there are a number of independent schools including the Kingston Grammar School, founded in 1561 by Queen Elizabeth I, and Surbiton High School. There are nine libraries, a museum and an art gallery.

Mayoral annual allowance: £4,000.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The London Borough of Lambeth consists of the former Metropolitan Borough of Lambeth and the following wards of the former Metropolitan Borough of Wandsworth: Larkhall, Clapham North, Clapham Park, Thornton (East of Cavendish Road), Streatham Hill, St. Leonards (East of the railway), Streatham Common and Streatham South. Lambeth has a larger population than any of the other Inner London Boroughs.

Lambeth's 215 miles of road spread from the 2½ miles Thames frontage (which includes the approaches to the Waterloo, Hungerford, Westminster, Lambeth and Vauxhall bridges) to the Inner London boundary at Croydon.

The Town Hall, a fine building, includes a well equipped Assembly Hall and meeting rooms which are available for hire. Many notable buildings are situated in the Borough, such as Lambeth Palace, The County Hall, The Royal Festival Hall, The National Film Theatre, the Oval Cricket Ground, the Shell Centre and The Old Vic theatre. The new National Theatre on the South Bank is also in Lambeth.

There are eight hospitals in the Borough, including St. Thomas', the largest in London, and King's College. London's largest railway terminus, Waterloo, and 13 other stations serve the Borough, as well as 11 underground stations.

The Borough contains 656 acres of parks and open spaces. On 1st April 1971 the Borough Council took over from the Greater London Council the maintenance of approximately 540 acres of public open space. The open spaces transferred included major parks like Brockwell Park and Kennington Park as well as Streatham Common and Clapham Common. There are open-air swimming pools in two of these parks and the only windmill in Inner London is at Windmill Gardens.

The Council establishments include 13 public libraries and a further library is operated jointly with Croydon. There is a major Central Reference library and collections of gramophone records at 6 of the public libraries. Lambeth Crematorium and cemetery and Streatham cemetery are at Tooting as well as another cemetery and crematorium at West Norwood. Twelve Day Nurseries are operated by the Council. There are seven works depots, two public indoor swimming pools and a public laundry in the Borough.

The Mayoral allowance is £4,670.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The London Borough of Lewisham was formed in 1965 by the amalgamation of the former Metropolitan Boroughs of Deptford and Lewisham. It covers 13·7 square miles and is bounded by the boroughs of Southwark, Bromley and Greenwich and, at its northernmost point, by a short stretch of the Thames.

It is very much a dormitory suburb with pleasant residential districts in such areas as Catford, Lee, Blackheath Village, Forest Hill and Sydenham, but there is also some industry, particularly to the north of the borough, though local employment, as in South-East London generally, has been declining in recent years. To the south, in an area that up to 50 or 60 years ago was still largely rural, lie the large cottage-style estates of Downham and Bellingham built by the London County Council between the wars.

The Deptford part of the borough, in the north, is particularly rich in history. Samuel Pepys was, as Secretary to the Navy, a frequent visitor to Deptford docks. The site of the old dockyard is now occupied by the GLC's Pepys Estate, whose tower blocks command extensive views over the Thames. Alongside the modern blocks some of the 18th century dockyard buildings have been converted into houses and flats and in one particularly attractive former warehouse fronting on to the riverside walk there is also a branch library. Another distinguished visitor to Deptford in days gone by was Peter the Great, Czar of Russia, who as a young man served a shipbuilding apprenticeship in the dockyard. The existence of the docks in the north of the borough is recognized by the fact that Lewisham is one of the five Docklands boroughs.

Deptford today is the scene of an important urban renewal scheme. The High Street, part of which is pedestrianised on Saturdays to permit easier access to the market stalls and shops, has been improved recently by a facelift scheme.

There are other good local shopping centres in Catford, Forest Hill, Sydenham and Lee Green. Central Lewisham itself has been designated one of the six strategic shopping centres in London and as the first phase of a major redevelopment scheme now has a large covered precinct complete with a multi-storey car park and a leisure centre incorporating a sports hall and the Riverdale Hall, which is available for public entertainment as well as for private hire. A smaller redevelopment scheme at Catford includes another pedestrian shopping precinct close to the island complex that comprises the Town Hall with its new civic suite opened in 1971 and the 1,000-seat Concert Hall. There is also a small modern precinct at Lee Green.

Sport is provided for by the Lewisham Leisure Centre mentioned above and by the Crofton Leisure Centre, which is run by the Borough jointly with the ILEA. In addition there are many local sports clubs and a municipal golf course at Beckenham Place Park. All together there are nearly 800 acres of open space in the borough and several new parks are planned. Fordham Park in New Cross is nearing completion.

The Horniman Museum at Forest Hill has an important anthropological collection and specializes also in natural history and musical instruments. The museum is run by the ILEA and provides special facilities for schoolchildren. Goldsmiths' College, part of the University of London, which as well as providing degree courses is one of the largest teacher training institutions in Europe, is situated in New Cross. The college's School of Adult and Social Studies plays an important part in community life.

Mayoral annual allowance: £2,800.

DEFINITION OF AREA
The Borough comprises the area of the former Boroughs of Mitcham and Wimbledon and the Urban District of Merton and Morden.

Merton is an Anglo-Saxon name for "the farm by the pool". The farm in question was constructed about AD 76 where a Roman road crossed the River Wandle.

The word Merton is now used to describe a progressive Outer London Borough situated in the south-east of Greater London covering an area of 9,380 acres and is home to 169,400 people. Our Borough provides a diversity of commercial opportunities; ample facilities for sport and recreation, and a high percentage of open parkland.

The Borough is well served with all types of public transport facilitating an easy journey to the city (Wimbledon–Waterloo approx. 9 minutes), the south coast and Gatwick Airport.

Commercial and Industrial.

Although most of the Borough would seem to be basically residential in character the Council have made provision for two industrial estates. These are in addition to the industrial complexes in Mitcham, the traditional London home of industrial development, which began in 1610 utilizing the water power of the River Wandle. The new sites provide both factory units and land for factory building which may be purchased or rented.

The needs of commerce have not been overlooked as the Council have permitted an office development programme which will allow office space to become available in the near future, slightly in excess of current commercial requirements.

Public participation exercises have commenced to determine the necessary plans for the future of the Borough's three shopping centres. When these plans are accepted some redevelopment will allow for extra shopping units for new traders.

Education

As an education authority, Merton opted for a three-tier system that provides primary schools (5–9), middle schools (9–13) and high schools (13–18), which together, total 66 schools. In addition the Council administer five special schools and two nurseries. Further education is provided by the Merton Technical College and the Wimbledon School of Art, backed by 13 Adult Education Centres.

Sport and Recreation.

As some 2,634 acres of the Borough are devoted to parks, recreation grounds and public open spaces, the Council were able to take the opportunity to provide a vast range of sports pitches, designed to cater for most tastes. However, for the less sport orientated, there are some very colourful flower gardens, a riverside walk and an annual programme of outdoor entertainment which appeals to most. These summer presentations include orchestras, choirs, pop groups, art exhibitions, steam rallies, to name but a few. Children are provided with a special show every day throughout the school summer holidays.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The London Borough of Redbridge comprises the former Boroughs of Ilford, and Wanstead and Woodford, part of the former Borough of Dagenham, and part of the former Urban District of Chigwell.

It came into being following the reorganization of local government in London in 1965. The name Redbridge comes from the Red (brick) Bridge which once spanned the River Roding, the boundary between the former boroughs.

Redbridge is principally residential in character but has some new industrial estates and important industries—light engineering, the manufacture of radio and electrical components, and chemicals. It has many large shops and offices and is an important regional shopping and commercial centre. The line of a proposed road, to the south of the existing High Road, will relieve the Ilford Town Centre of through traffic and is planned to be built by the GLC in 1981. This will allow a major part of the High Road to be pedestrianised and will provide a framework within which the Centre can be redeveloped. A plan to guide the development of the Central Area up to 1986 has been agreed by the Council for publicity and consultation purposes.

The Kenneth More Theatre was built by the Council in 1975 in the Town Centre. A Sports Centre was built at the same time, in the grounds of the Wanstead High School; it is a "dual use" centre. There is a community-based Sports Centre at Barkingside, and another is planned at Redbridge Technical College (built by the Council in 1969). There are 18 completed sheltered housing schemes providing for 827 elderly and handicapped people. Several other units are in the pipeline and Redbridge leads the country in this field.

Recreational facilities in Redbridge include two public swimming baths, and one outdoor pool in Valentines Park. There are twenty-six parks and recreation grounds in the Borough, totalling 520 acres, with facilities for football, cricket, bowls and tennis. The Borough is fortunate that in addition to many acres of public and private open space, it has some 1,250 acres of Epping Forest and Hainault Forest within its boundaries.

And the future of recreation is also receiving attention. Plans are being made to restore hundreds of acres of Fairlop Plain in the north-east of the Borough, after gravel extraction. The major use will be recreational, ranging from a golf course to a huge sports centre, with nature walks, cycle racing track, and horse riding and sailing.

Mayoral (and Deputy Mayor's) annual allowance: £5,500.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The Borough was formed on 1st April 1965 by the amalgamation of the former Metropolitan Boroughs of Bermondsey, Camberwell and Southwark.

It stretches from the River Thames to Crystal Palace, and contains a variety of industrial, commercial and residential development. The northern part of the Borough is mainly commercial and industrial, whilst the southern part is mainly residential. The whole area was subjected to heavy aerial bombardment during World War II, particularly in the riverside and dock areas of Bermondsey and Rotherhithe.

Two cathedrals are situated in the Borough—Southwark Cathedral, adjacent to London Bridge, and St. George's (RC) Cathedral in St. George's Road, about one-quarter mile from the Elephant and Castle.

The Borough is fortunate in possessing numerous Open Spaces totalling in all some 350 acres including Peckham Rye and Park, Southwark Park and Lady Geraldine Harmsworth Park.

The South London Art Gallery was reopened in 1949 after having been closed by enemy action, the Cuming Museum in Walworth Road houses a collection illustrative of life in the area from the earliest times to the present day, and the Livesey Museum in the Old Kent Road displays changing exhibitions of local interest.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The London Borough of Sutton was created in 1965 through the amalgamation of the former Boroughs of Sutton and Cheam, and Beddington and Wallington, and the Urban District of Carshalton. All these localities are rich in historic associations. Historic buildings include All Saints Church, Carshalton (12th Century); the Lumley Chapel, St. Dunstan's Church, Cheam; Beddington Church (14th Century); the Great Hall of Beddington Place. Cheam has a number of old timber-framed houses. Sutton is on the southern edge of Greater London with easy access to Central London and the South Coast. Bordered by open countryside on its southern boundary, it has good rail services to other parts of South London and the South Coast and is served by London Transport and London Country bus and Green Line coach routes.

Mainly residential in character, with some light industry, the area is a popular choice with commuters.

It has a wide range of residential properties and its many parks and open spaces make Sutton especially attractive to families with young children.

Sutton itself has an excellent shopping centre with most of the major chain stores represented, plus a variety of smaller shops, restaurants and other services. There are good shopping facilities at Wallington, Carshalton, Cheam, Worcester Park and Rosehill, with smaller shopping centres serving the main residential areas.

Sutton's Civic Centre comprises Civic Offices, Sutton College of Liberal Arts and a Central Library which is one of the most modern in Britain.

In Sutton's town centre a parallel roads system is nearing completion to route through traffic round the busy high street so that this can be pedestrianised.

The River Wandle rises in the Borough and flows north to the Thames. There are 977 acres of parks and open spaces including The Oaks, the estate once leased to the 12th Earl of Derby. This gave its name to The Oaks horse race which, with the Derby, is run annually on Epsom Racecourse.

The residential areas of Sutton, Cheam, Worcester Park, Carshalton, Beddington and Wallington were rapidly developed between the first and second world wars. At the south-eastern corner of the Borough lies the former Croydon Airport site, which has been developed as a residential neighbourhood known as Roundshaw with its own shopping centre, schools, library and community centre, playing fields and open space.

An allowance of £3,300 per annum is made to the Mayor.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The Borough, formed by the London Government Act 1963, comprises the area of the former Metropolitan Boroughs of Bethnal Green, Poplar and Stepney. The name is a resurrection from the past when 143 years ago the three parishes of Bethnal Green, Poplar and Stepney formed part of the Borough of Tower Hamlets, the result of the passing of the Reform Act of 1832.

The whole of the present-day southern boundary consists of river frontage, including the Docklands redevelopment area. The Council is a member of the Dockland Joint Committee. But it is not only the Dockland area of the Borough which is changing. The Council is well up in its clearance programme and new Council housing is being completed every year. The target is 1,000 homes annually. At present, the Council has 18 thousand homes. However, there are many fine historical buildings in the borough and the Council has made several conservation areas and a large general improvement area. In fact the Borough has many tourist attractions, including the Tower of London, the Royal Mint and the famous Petticoat Lane Market.

Within the Borough boundaries there lies 188·59 acres of open space administered by the Greater London Council, including part of Victoria Park on the northern boundaries; a further 190 acres of open space is administered by the Council itself.

The Council, as a Social Service Authority, runs many children's homes, day centres for elderly and handicapped and old people's homes. It also gives wide home support services and has a reputation for a very high standard in Social Services.

The Council maintains three holiday homes, which are open all the year round for residents of the Borough, and a hotel at Hayling Island to provide holidays for the handicapped of the Borough.

Mayoral annual allowance: £7,370.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The Borough assumed full powers and duties on 1st April 1965, under the London Government Act 1963, and comprises the former Essex Boroughs of Chingford, Leyton and Walthamstow.

It adjoins the Metropolitan green belt and is bounded by Epping Forest and the valley of the River Lea. It is predominantly a residential area with belts of industry and is linked directly with central London by train and bus services.

The Borough has many acres of forest land within its boundary and also controls a large number of parks and open spaces with facilities for sport and entertainment. Two open air swimming pools at Whipps Cross, Leytonstone, and Larkswood, Chingford, are a special feature providing healthy recreation for thousands throughout the summer season. There are indoor baths at Leyton, and a large new indoor swimming pool, having a capacity for 640 bathers, was opened at Chingford Road, Walthamstow, in May 1966. The Borough also possesses three Assembly Halls in which social and cultural functions are held the whole year round. A number of fine modern schools ranging from primary to secondary and grammar establishments are within the Borough.

Mayoral allowance: £2,500.

DEFINITION OF AREA

Created under the London Government Act 1963 by the amalgamation of the Metropolitan Boroughs of Paddington, St. Marylebone and Westminster.

The City of Westminster has the largest rateable value of any rating authority in the United Kingdom. 23 per cent of the City (1,258 acres) is open space, including London's finest parks—Hyde Park, St. James's Park, Green Park, Regent's Park (part) and Kensington Gardens (part), together with Victoria Embankment Gardens and Paddington Recreation Ground.

Buckingham and St. James's Palaces are in the City of Westminster as are most of the Government and official buildings, the Houses of Parliament, Westminster Abbey, Westminster Cathedral, the National Gallery, the Law Courts, the Royal Albert Hall and other famous buildings. The Council owns and manages Porchester Hall, Seymour Hall and Caxton Hall and it provides two community centres and a Coroner's Court and mortuary.

'There are some 7,000 statutorily listed buildings of special architectural or historic interest in the City and considerable areas of special amenity value amounting to over one third of the City's acreage are designated as Conservation Areas.

The Council has provided twenty-one off-street garages with 7,408 car spaces.

The public libraries issue three and a quarter million books, discs and cassettes annually. Emphasis is given to reference services and there are special collections on music, medicine, fine arts, ethnic groups, local history and archives. The Social Services Department has four decentralized Area Offices supported by a central administration. Services provided include an adoption agency, homes for the elderly (three seaside holiday homes), children's homes and hostels, day nurseries, home help service, meals on wheels, day centre with lunch club for the handicapped and three hostels and training centre for the mentally subnormal and mentally ill.

The Council has over 18,000 dwellings under management. A further 1,300 dwellings are either under construction or programmed to start during the next four years. Schemes for the rehabilitation of 780 dwellings are also under way or programmed during the same period. Heating and hot water for 3.200 dwellings is provided by exhaust steam from Battersea Power Station. A similar scheme serves 682 flats using steam from the Council's Porchester Baths. Post-1945 estates have been provided with as much open space as possible. Extensive provision has been made for car parking.

About 219 miles of street are cleansed and about 170,000 tonnes of refuse are collected annually; the frequency of both refuse collection and street cleansing varying according to the importance of the area and the density of the population. The salvage of about 4,400 tonnes of paper and cardboard per annum yields an income of £140,000.

Mayoral annual allowance: £8,000.

Chairman 1977/78: Coun. D. J. Williams (Meirionnydd D.C.).
Vice-Chairman 1977/78: Coun. H. R. Hicks (Rhondda B.C).
Secretary: S. Jones (Chief Executive and Town Clerk, Merthyr Tydfil B.C.).

The Council was created following local government reorganisation and held its first meeting on 7 May 1974. Under a constitution adopted on 5 July 1974, membership is open to all those district councils in Wales which are members of the Association of District Councils whose constitution provides for regional groupings of the ADC's members in England and for Wales a Council for the Principality. All 37 district councils in Wales are represented on the Council by one member per district.

Meetings are held at approximately quarterly intervals with the Annual Meeting in June and after meeting in different parts of Wales, it has been decided to hold all future meetings in Llandrindod Wells as the most centrally placed venue.

The objects of the Council are to protect and advance the powers, interests, rights and privileges of constituent councils and to watch over these powers etc as they may be affected by legislation or proposed legislation or otherwise.

The status of the Council as the "Welsh arm of the ADC" and as representing all Welsh district councils has been quickly recognised by government departments in consultations and in appointments, e.g. the Local Government Act 1974 provides that the representatives on the representative body for Wales shall be nominated by the Council, and two members of the Land Authority for Wales are nominated by the Council.

> There shall from that date be a body corporate by the name of "the Charter Trustees of the City" or "the Charter Trustees of the Town" as the case may be, with the addition of the name of the former city or borough consisting of the district councillors for the wards wholly or partly comprising the area of the former city or borough or if the number of those councillors is less than three, consisting of those councillors and such number of local government electors for that area appointed by the district council as will make the number of Charter Trustees up to three.
> The Charter Trustees may in every year elect one of their members to be city or town mayor and another to be deputy city or town mayor.

DEFINITION OF AREA

Workington MB, Cockermouth UD, Keswick UD, Maryport UD, Cockermouth RD, Wigton RD.

Historically, the name Allerdale derives from the early 12th century with the creation of the Barony of Allerdale, its baronial seat being at Cockermouth Castle. Cumberland was later divided into parliamentary 'wards'; the ward of 'Allerdale Below Derwent' and part of 'Allerdale Above Derwent' are now contained in the present district.

The district is bounded by the Lake District mountains and the Solway Firth. It includes mountains and sparsely populated fells; hill farms on marginal land and intensive dairy farming on the Solway

Plain; and a more populous western coastal belt in which the old heavy industries of steel and coal are rapidly giving way to new lighter industries. In post-war years and particularly during the last decade many new industries have been established along the west coast including plastics, footwear, electronics, fibres and the motor industry.

During the last few years communications have improved dramatically; the motorway is just outside the Allerdale boundary and the A66 now completed links the western coast with the M6 by a fast motor road. The electrification of the Carlisle–London railway came into operation early in 1973.

Tourism increases annually, and is by far the most important industry in some parts of Allerdale. The district includes Keswick and the popular North Western area of the Lake District, six of the major lakes, and within the district the coastline is proving increasingly popular with holidaymakers.

Items of historical interest cover the time span from the stone circles of Keswick and Elva Plain; the Roman forts at Maryport, Papcastle and Wigton; the silver, lead and other mines and pack-horse routes in the Lake District; the more recent history of the industrial revolution on the west coast and of course the homes and haunts of the Lake District poets and the setting for Hugh Walpole's saga of Rogue Herries and his descendants.

Chairman's annual allowance: £1,500.

Audit by District Auditor (No. 1 Audit District).

DEFINITION OF AREA

Alnwick UD, Amble UD, Alnwick RD, Rothbury RD.

The Alnwick District Council, situated in Mid Northumberland, lies in one of the most beautiful parts of the country. The district is mainly rural but includes a number of important towns and villages and the administrative centre is in Alnwick, the county town of Northumberland.

The area is steeped in history, dating back to very early times, and has many places of interest including castles at Alnwick, Dunstanburgh, Rothbury and Warkworth; the first named being the home of the Dukes of Northumberland. Evidence still exists of Roman outposts, the invasion by William the Conqueror and camp sites made by the Ancient Britons.

For the more energetic there are numerous walks in the hills and dales particularly in the Cheviots and towards Rothbury; a large part of this area is included in the Northumberland National Park. The east coast comprises lovely villages with sandy bays stretching from Amble-by-the-Sea to Newton-by-the-Sea and including the fishing village of Craster, famous for its kippers.

The whole of the district is very attractive to tourists and thousands of people visit the area every year.

Industry is mainly light as one would anticipate in a predominantly rural area, but unemployment is well above the national average and attempts are being made to attract further industries into the area.

Chairman's annual allowance: £545.

East Retford MB, Worksop MB, East Retford RD (part), Worksop RD (part).

The district consists of the existing Boroughs and Rural Districts of East Retford and Worksop in North Nottinghamshire, having a population of approximately 100,000.

Bassetlaw is a fast developing area, possessing considerable potential for industry, commerce and office development. A variety of firms are already established in the Worksop and Retford areas. In Worksop, the Dukeries Industrial Area of approximately 100 acres has sites available on attractive freehold or leasehold terms. Land is also available for industry in Retford and in other parts of Bassetlaw.

Bassetlaw has good communication links with most parts of the country, being in close proximity to the M1, the M18 and the A1(M) which neatly bisects the district. Retford is on the main line from Kings Cross to Edinburgh and also the Liverpool to Grimsby line.

Sporting activities are well catered for in the district with both public facilities and many private clubs. The Sports Centres at Worksop, Bircotes and Retford provide a comprehensive range of recreational activities together with social bars and lounge facilities. A new 18-hole golf course at Worksop is available for play.

Clumber Park, a National Trust Property, is open to the public at all times and attracts thousands of visitors each year. King's Park in Retford, comprising an area of some 29 acres, is also an ideal recreational venue. In addition to formal gardens, tennis courts and a bowling green, there is a large area of open space for picnics, relaxation and for play.

The Nottinghamshire County Council is the Education Authority for the district and has provided excellent facilities for school, Adult and Further Education. The Worksop College Public School has facilities for 400 boys and there are several minor private schools within the area.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The Borough comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:
Blackburn CB, Darwen MB, Turton UD (part), Blackburn RD (parishes of Eccleshill, Livesey, Pleasington, Tockholes, Yate and Pickup Bank).

Date of Charter: 15th May 1974; became Borough 1974.

Once the weaving centre of the world, Blackburn is no longer pre-eminently a textile town. It now has a wide spread of industry, including several industrial estates, with radio valve manufacture, electronic, heavy and precision engineering, paper felt manufacture and a prominent tufted carpet machinery manufacturer. It is the centre of the brewing industry for a large part of the north and other products include slippers, car accessories, paints and, of course, textiles.

Also recognised as a market and retail centre, the town now boasts one of the finest comprehensive covered markets in the country. The entire town centre, covering over 100 acres, is also being developed on a comprehensive basis as a traffic-free shopping precinct, with car parking above and service access below. The first phase, completed in 1970, comprises 60 shops, 3 supermarkets, a departmental store and also a large luxury nightclub providing entertainment and catering facilities for 1,000 people. The second phase, completed in 1972, provides additional shopping facilities and more car-parking spaces. Work on the third phase is progressing.

Darwen is a town which has largely developed since the time of the industrial revolution on its basic industries of cotton spinning and weaving, coal mining and the manufacture of paper. Although mining has lapsed and the cotton trade has shrunk considerably, wallpaper manufacture with a world wide distribution is still an important part of Darwen's industrial scene. The introduction of other traditional and contemporary industries, such as engineering and the manufacture of paint and plastics, has now provided for a wider field of employment.

The Borough offers a full range of recreational facilities including Community Centres and sports complex, an athletics track, golf courses, sailing, a designated Country Park and concerts of international standing.

The Borough has the only cathedral in the new County of Lancashire, to which substantial extensions have been completed and within the rural area of the Borough, Turton Tower, an early 15th century mansion which also houses a museum, is open to the public.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The district comprises the area of the Blackpool CB which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974.

Blackpool is recognised as the largest and most popular holiday resort in the country. Millions of pounds have been spent by the Council and private enterprises in the provision of a most extensive range of amenities and attractions which include a 7-mile-long promenade with safe sandy beaches, 3 piers, Pleasure Beach, Fun Park, Model Village, open and covered swimming pools—the Derby Bath equipped to Olympic standards and a frequent scene of national and international swimming and diving events also provides a Sauna Centre with a full range of remedial baths.

The latest Council development is a half-million-pound Zoo Park, adjacent to Stanley Park. Outdoors there are two golf courses, crown and flat bowling greens, hard and grass tennis courts and sailing and boating on the open sea and at Stanley Park. The cricket season provides league, county and representative games and there are senior league fixtures for both Soccer and Rugby League enthusiasts.

Entertainment is provided on a fabulous scale and the summer-season programme includes 8 live shows including an Ice Rink with a resident summer Ice Show, Discos, Cabaret Clubs and Cinemas. Below the 520-ft. high Tower is housed a magnificent ballroom, roof gardens, aquarium, menagerie and an international circus. Each autumn the Council spends approximately £350,000 on an extensive scheme of decorative illuminations and the success of this attraction draws upwards of 8 million late-season visitors. The Council owns and manages the Blackpool Airport and has services linked with the Continent and various parts of the United Kingdom. Customs facilities are provided.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The district comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:
In the administrative county of Gwent the urban districts of Abertillery, Brynmawr, Ebbw Vale, Nantyglo and Blaina and Tredegar.

The district is situated in the north western part of the County of Gwent.

The area in the past has depended on the coal, iron and steel industries for its industrial base but this is now being diversified. The area is well served by the Heads of the Valleys Road which is linked by dual-carriageway with the M5 and M50 and gives easy access to the Midlands, the North of England and West Wales, while the M4 provides good communications to London and the South of England.

The district has substantial investments in housing, roads, town centre redevelopment programmes and in the provision of industrial sites. Considerable expenditure has also been incurred in the reclamation of former derelict industrial land, which is now available for new development and for recreational purposes.

The Brecon Beacons National Park lies partly within the Council's area and includes facilities for hill- and mountain-climbing, fishing, pony trekking, sailing and canoeing. Within the district are three indoor leisure centres which provide excellent sporting facilities for all ages.

Mayor's annual allowance: £2,000.

DEFINITION OF AREA

Bolsover UD, Blackwell RD, Clowne RD.

The Blackwell area is pleasantly situated on the border of Derbyshire and Nottinghamshire, and is essentially a mining district. The area has many historical associations, including Hardwick Hall, the Elizabethan Mansion, formerly the seat of the Duke of Devonshire and now maintained by the National Trust. The churches in the area, in many cases, date back a number of centuries.

The Parish of Bolsover is mainly a mining area and contains the largest smokeless fuel plant in the country. Bolsover has a commanding castle which goes back to Norman times. The present building dates from the 17th century.

Clowne's principal industry is coal mining with a certain amount of agriculture. Its historical associations include Barlborough Hall, built in 1583 and now used as a school, and Steetley Chapel the finest example of Norman architecture in the county. Exhibited in many museums are the finds from Creswell Crags, an archaeological site which was a human habitation more than 20,000 years ago. There is an industrial site at Station Road, Clowne.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The district comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:
The county borough of Bolton.
In the administrative county of Lancaster:
  the borough of Farnworth;
  the urban districts of Blackrod, Horwich, Kearsley, Little Lever and Westhoughton; in the urban district of Turton, the Bradshaw North, Bradshaw South, Bromley Cross and Eagley wards and part of the Egerton ward.

Metropolitan Bolton is a major centre of industry and commerce which has seen rapid change in recent years. Once largely dependent on the textile manufacturing industry, the Borough has met the challenge of modern industrial times by diversifying its manufacturing into new industry, particularly engineering. The transition has been aided considerably by Bolton's excellent motorway and railway communications.

In the north, the district rises into the foothills of the Pennines with its spectacular moorland dotted here and there with picturesque reservoirs. This, along with the Anglezark and Rivington areas and the Croal River Valley provides Bolton people with ample opportunity for outdoor recreation of all kinds.

Bolton has many other notable features including one of the finest Town Halls and pedestrian precincts in the country, historic Churchgate, the Octagon Theatre, the Central Art Gallery and Museum and a huge variety of shops, markets and entertainments. Nearby are historic Hall i'th' Wood, where Samuel Crompton invented the Spinning Mule in 1779, Smithills Hall and Firwood Fold, many fine parks, 11 golf courses, six swimming pools and two leisure centres.

Mayoral annual allowance: £1,500.

DEFINITION OF AREA

Goole MB, Goole RD, Howden RD, Isle of Axholme RD.

The Boothferry Borough is centred around the Port of Goole and comprises the former rural districts of Goole, Howden and the Isle of Axholme in addition to the town of Goole.

The district stretches from the edge of the Yorkshire Wolds at Holme on Spalding Moor to the bed of the River Trent at Owston Ferry. Five rivers form the key feature of the district which consists mainly of agricultural land.

Industry is present around the developing port and town of Goole, which is the most inland port on the east coast standing 50 miles from the North Sea on the River Ouse. Its frequent services to the Continent provide an economical outlet for exports of the great industrial areas of West Yorkshire, Lancashire and the Midlands, with which the port is connected by road, rail and inland waterways. The completion of the M62 motorway, which passes within two miles of the docks, makes Goole one of the best motorway-connected ports in the U.K. The early completion of the M18 and M180 motorways will also link the southern part of the district with the major industrial areas.

Mayoral annual allowance: £1,375.

DEFINITION OF AREA
The district comprises the area of the Bournemouth CB which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974.

Bournemouth possesses the reputation of being a leading resort and holiday town in Great Britain. This reputation is based on many factors, including its equable climate, its position on the sea, the vast unspoiled countryside of Dorset, Wiltshire and the New Forest which forms its hinterland, the good road and rail communications now supplemented by air travel facilities through Bournemouth (Hurn) Airport, a regional shopping centre of high standard, extensive entertainment and recreational facilities, and a wide range of accommodation for visitors including the largest number of first class hotel rooms of any town outside London. The Council is continually reviewing the facilities which are necessary to meet the full potential demands and the improvement of the town's attractions.

The town is proud of its miles of sea-front and sandy beaches extending from Alum Chine to Hengistbury Head which have been developed in a manner which preserves natural beauty, and although road access is accorded, the principal beach areas are completely free from vehicular traffic. The Council is responsible for providing conference, theatre, restaurant and café facilities, and has plans for considerable redevelopment to provide seating for up to 5,000 persons in one hall together with ancillary facilities necessary to accommodate the largest conventions and conferences, with a view to attracting international as well as British patronage. There are over 1,800 acres of public parks and gardens including three municipally-owned 18-hole golf courses.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The district comprises the area of Easthampstead RD which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974.

The district is an attractive forested area with easy access to London, Reading and Windsor and has many areas of outstanding beauty. The administrative centre of the area is Bracknell which in 1949 was designated the site of a New Town.

The New Town comprises 3,285 acres and the 1981 designated population of the town is 60,000. Within the New Town area there is a wide diversity of industry and it is surrounded by more rural parishes set in the Green Belt. It is expected that the population of the District will grow to over 90,00 within the next decade, although the Development Corporation will be dissolved in 1982. The Council is actively involved in the provision of amenities in the District. A Sports Centre with running track, football pitch, grandstand and a wide range of indoor sporting and social activities, including 3 swimming pools, is now well established and a Municipal Golf Course is operated in co-operation with Wokingham District. Picnic areas have been established at Bagshot Road and Caesar's Camp and other leisure areas are being developed. A large Arts Centre covering a wide range of activities is assisted by the Council. A neighbourhood sports centre opens in Crowthorne in early 1979.

Audit by District Auditor (No. 3 Audit District).

DEFINITION OF AREA

The industrial and commercial centre of Bradford Metropolitan District is the city of Bradford and its direct links with the motorway network are increasing its importance in this respect. However, whilst Bradford dominates the District in terms of population and industrial output, the other towns, though smaller, make a valuable contribution to the economic and cultural vitality of the area.

The District is divided in two by the Aire Valley, and it is in this valley that the industry is concentrated, in such towns as Keighley and Shipley. Historically the area has always been associated with wool and textiles but industrial activity now covers a much wider range. Keighley, for example, is well known for its high quality machine tools and the engineering and electrical industries are well represented in the area. Many years' experience of international trading has helped to develop considerable commercial expertise, particularly in banking, insurance, exporting and marketing.

The District is not wholly industrial, however. To the North West dairy farming predominates, whilst to the West are the wild moors of Bronté Country and the village of Haworth, which attracts many thousands of tourists each year, through its close association with the Bronté family. North East is Ilkley Moor and the town of Ilkley on the banks of the River Wharfe. Ilkley is another centre for visitors, a spa town standing at the Southern entrance to the Yorkshire Dales.

Leisure activities are well catered for with plentiful facilities for a wide range of pursuits, indoor and outdoor. In addition to provision for swimming, athletics and similar activities, a number of multi purpose leisure and sports centres are being developed. The Council administers a number of public halls which cater for a wide variety of community activities and it owns large areas of parkland and public open space - the St. Ives Estate at Bingley has an 18-hole municipal golf course.

There are six established museums, one of which, the Bradford Industrial Museum, provides a unique record of the wool textile and allied industries.

The Bradford Metropolitan District is a unification, under one administration, of a number of places which are inter-dependent in terms of housing, employment, shopping facilities and some local authority services. Unity does not mean uniformity, however, and each town and village still retains its own character and individuality, each with special needs which can now be catered for more adequately.

Agencies. The following county council functions are carried out by the district council on an agency basis: Road Safety.

DEFINITION OF AREA

Braintree and Bocking UD, Halstead UD, Witham UD, Halstead RD, Braintree RD.

The new district has been created by the amalgamation of three urban areas and two rural districts, giving an almost equal population mix. Two of the urban areas have existing town expansion schemes with the GLC; the rural areas vary in population and facilities depending on geographical position, while many villages are of a pleasant and historically attractive character.

The area is a large one, but with fairly easy communications to the proposed administrative centre at Braintree. The farthest village from the centre is about fifteen miles. In and around the three urban areas (Braintree, Halstead and Witham) development both residential and industrial has been rapid.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The borough comprises the area of the former county borough of Brighton.

As well as carrying out the various sea-front and sea-defence works associated with a popular seaside resort, the Council owns and manages many of the town's well-known tourist attractions. The Pavilion Estate with its world-famous Royal Pavilion is used for the Regency Exhibition, conferences and social functions and "The Dome" for entertainments, concerts, etc. The Estate also houses the museum, art gallery and the central library.

The Booth Museum with its collection of British birds was bequeathed to the Council by its creator E. T. Booth and Preston Manor with its museum and adjoining public park was given to the town by the Stanford Family. The race ground was presented to the town by the Race Stand Trustees and is managed by lessees who are members of the Council.

The Council has substantial land-holdings in the town as well as approximately 15,000 acres of the surrounding downland. In 1947 the Council acquired the Stanmer Estate which comprises approximately 4,958 acres of land situated on both sides of the Lewes-Brighton road. The Council has leased Stanmer House and approximately 159 acres of land on the estate to the University of Sussex for the establishment of the University.

Conferences

An increasing number of conferences and exhibitions are held in Brighton each year and the town is one of the few resorts to employ staff specially for this purpose.

As part of the 15-acre Churchill Square Development, a 5,000 seater multi-purpose conference, exhibition and entertainments centre known as the Brighton Centre has been completed and it is the largest of its kind in Britain incorporating the latest designs in audio-visual aids, simultaneous interpretation equipment, press and television facilities.

Brighton Festival of the Arts

The Brighton Festival of the Arts is held in May. Its object is to point to contemporary and future developments in the arts against a background of Brighton's history and traditions. International artists of drama, music and the arts regularly appear in an extensive programme of main and 'fringe' events.

Audit by District Auditor (No. 7 Audit District) and Approved Auditor (Price Waterhouse) for The Port of Bristol Authority.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The district comprises the area of the Bristol CB which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974.

Bristol is one of the oldest cities in the United Kingdom and it was created a county in 1373, and a county borough in 1881. On 1st April 1974 it became one of the districts in the new county of Avon and is the largest non-metropolitan district in England and Wales. The city can now be said to be at the cross roads of Britain, with its proximity to the junction of the M4 and M5 motorways. It has excellent rail connections and its own international airport. In addition, the city operates the largest municipally-owned dock undertaking in the United Kingdom.

The City Council delegates its powers to the Docks Committee and this body acts under the style of "The Port of Bristol Authority" being responsible for conservancy, navigational aids and the provision of capital equipment such as quays, sheds and cranes. The port comprises the docks of Avonmouth, Portishead and the new Royal Pontbury Dock all of which are constructed in close proximity to the mouth of the River Avon. Royal Pontbury Dock can accommodate six vessels of 70,000 tonnes deadweight at any one time, entry being gained by a lock 1,200 feet long by 140 feet wide. A mile long private access road links the dock with the M5 motorway interchange No. 19 at Portbury and good connections to the National rail network exist. Principal imports through the existing facilities at Avonmouth and associated trading estates are grain and animal feeding stuffs, refined petroleum products, metals, ores, tea and forest products.

Bristol's airport is situated at Lulsgate (A38 Bristol to Bridgwater) about 6½ miles from the city centre. The main instrument runway of 6,600 feet enables aircraft such as the BAC 111, Boeing 737, Comet, Caravelle, Britannia, DC9 and Tristar, to operate from the Airport. It is increasingly used as a departure point especially for package tours to south western Europe. Scheduled international services link it with Ireland and the Continent. A full airfreight service is offered, including customs clearance and a road link to London Airport.

Its situation on the main transport arteries of Britain is leading to the City becoming increasingly popular as a venue for national and international conferences and a popular tourist centre. There are five large luxury hotels within the city and many others which can offer accommodation and other facilities, and visitors can enjoy themselves in almost 4,000 acres of open spaces, administered by the city. The city also operates twelve swimming pools, including one open air, and two comprehensive sports centres, with facilities for squash, badminton, table tennis, sauna, bowls, etc. It is intended that the city docks, which will be closing to commercial traffic, will be redeveloped with areas for business, residential and leisure activities. The city also boasts the largest entertainment complex in Europe as well as twenty-six cinemas and four theatres,

Audit by District Auditor (No. 4 Audit District).

DEFINITION OF AREA

Bromsgrove UD, Bromsgrove RD.

The district is situate on the southern boundary of the West Midlands metropolitan county and comprises the township of Bromsgrove, the villages of Catshill, Bournheath, Marlbrook, Blackwell, Barnt Green and Rubery and the fourteen parishes of the former Rural District of Bromsgrove. Bromsgrove itself is an ancient market town situate on the A38 approximately 13 miles south of Birmingham and about the same distance north of Worcester. It is also at the junction of main roads to Kidderminster, Stourbridge and Redditch. Whilst predominantly a residential area, in the life of which agriculture plays an important part, the district has its industrial side. Many residents are employed at the British Leyland motor works, situate on the northern boundary of the district, and in Bromsgrove itself at, inter alia, the home of Europe's largest forging organization, the Newton Works of Garrington's Limited, one of the companies in the vast GKN Group. There are two industrial estates, the property of the council, at Aston Fields, at present being extended, and at Rubery.

The district is well served from the educational viewpoint in that it possesses a public school, a college of further education and a teachers' training college, now combined to form a higher education complex, high schools and many excellent middle and primary schools. It is also well served by hospitals.

The council owns markets and allotments and various recreation grounds. There is a putting green and tennis courts at Crown Close. Sanders Park, not far from the town centre, contains further recreational facilities, viz. bowling green, tennis courts, putting green, etc.

Development in the parishes is mainly residential and has been rapid during the past few years. Several of the parishes are urban in character and have sewerage, water and lighting facilities. Collection of house refuse is undertaken throughout the District.

Chairman's annual allowance: £1,250.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The district comprises the areas of the Burnley CB, Padiham UD and parts of Burnley RD which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974.

The new authority will continue the progressive traditions of the combining authorities. It owns parks, putting greens, bowling greens, allotments, swimming pools, sports pavilions, tennis courts, a golf course, a pitch and putt course, a boating lake and a concert pavilion. A large sports complex has been constructed in the Town Centre and the final phases of the Central Area Redevelopment Scheme have been completed.

Concerts are provided throughout the season by the Municipal Symphony Orchestra and Choir. Other entertainment is provided by the Mid-Pennine Association for the Arts to which the Council is a main contributor.

The area is rich in historical interest and attractive countryside. Towneley Hall, now an art gallery and museum, holds great attraction for visitors and is set in beautiful parkland. Part of the area is designated as an area of outstanding natural beauty while another large portion is described as being of high landscape value.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The district comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:

The county borough of Bury.

In the administrative county of Lancaster:

- the boroughs of Prestwich and Radcliffe;
- the urban districts of Tottington and Whitefield;
- in the urban district of Ramsbottom, the Central, East, South and West wards.

The borough is pleasantly situated in the County of Greater Manchester and adjoins large areas of moorland and countryside which provide facilities for relaxation for both the walker and the motorist. Areas of great natural beauty such as the Ribble Valley and the Lake District are easy of access and the Lancashire Coast is little more than one hour's distance away by car.

The borough has the great asset of excellent road communications having within its boundaries the M66, a direct link to the M62 motorway which links the M6 and M1 motorways. The M62 motorway also provides a direct link to Manchester Airport which can now be reached from any part of the Borough, by road, within half an hour. In addition the Borough has a frequent train service to Manchester. A new road/rail interchange is at present being built.

The population of the new borough is continuing to rise steadily and there has been a considerable amount of attractive private housing development in the area in recent years and this, along with other factors such as excellent educational and recreational facilities, has done much to increase the attractiveness of the borough as a residential area.

The industry of the area is extremely varied and the council is anxious to encourage the further development of industry and commerce in the Borough in order to ensure the continued prosperity of the area. Land and accommodation is available in the borough for industrial and commercial development and the Industrial Development Officer will be pleased to supply details.

Mayoral annual allowance: £2,500.

Superannuation Scheme administered by West Yorkshire CC.

Audit by District Auditor (No. 3 Audit District).

DEFINITION OF AREA

The County Borough of Halifax;
The Boroughs of Brighouse and Todmorden;
The Urban Districts of Elland, Hebden Royd, Ripponden and Sowerby Bridge;
The Shelf East and Shelf West Wards of the former Queensbury and Shelf UDC;
The Rural District of Hepton.

The Reorganization of Local Government in 1974 produced an administrative blending of town and countryside already apparent in the natural structure of the Calderdale District, where stone built industrial townships merged harmoniously with river valley and hill pasture.

Calderdale effectively has one foot in the old industrial West Riding and the other firmly planted on the moors. Its landscape is distinctive and varied, the pleasing aspects of its geographical features matched by the works of man throughout a long and interesting history.

Halifax is the largest town and site of the main Local Government Offices. Once the chief West Riding wool marketing centre and heavily dependant on the textile industry, it has since diversified into many other trades, including confectionery and machine tools. It is also the headquarters of "The Halifax", the world's biggest building society, which was founded in 1853. Buildings of historic interest abound including the unique Piece Hall where 18th century clothiers traded their wares. The building has great beauty with its multi-storey colonnades fronting on a huge courtyard and it now contains a permanent museum and art gallery, as well as crafts and antique shops and a Friday and Saturday Open Market. It is also a centre for a variety of out-door entertainments.

Brighouse, Todmorden, Sowerby Bridge, Elland and Hebden Bridge, whilst industrial in character, have in general developed a multiplicity of trades and a wide variety of activities and most have an extensive rural hinterland of outstanding scenic beauty.

Ripponden, nestling in the pleasantly wooded Ryburn Valley has a predominantly rural character and its proximity to the M62 has also increased its attractiveness as a residential area.

Heptonstall, adjacent to Hebden Bridge, is a beautifully preserved village situated on the edge of the moors and is one of the oldest settlements in Calderdale. It possesses the unusual feature of a ruined 13th century church in the same churchyard as the present Parish Church.

Hardcastle Craggs, above Hebden Bridge, and the adjacent Crimsworth Dean of some 300 acres of woodlands, forms one of the north's best known local beauty spots.

Mayoral annual allowance: £1,000.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The district comprises the area of the Cambridge MB which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974.

Cambridge as the seat of an ancient university has a wealth of buildings of outstanding historic or architectural importance and is visited yearly by thousands of tourists, many of them from overseas. There are special facilities for tourists including a guide service, and the City has a number of English Language schools which cater— particularly during the summer months—for overseas students. There are many commons and open spaces reaching into the centre of the city and excellent bathing facilities, indoor and outdoor and the multi-purpose Kelsey Kerridge Sports Hall.

Industry is diverse and although strictly controlled includes a number of light industrial undertakings of considerable size particularly in the electronics field, the Pye Group being an outstanding example.

A scheme of central area redevelopment, based on the Lion Yard, was officially opened in December 1975. Shopping facilities are good.

The University provides conference facilities and many organizations, a number of them international in character, meet in Cambridge.

Mayoral annual allowance: £4.035.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The district comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:
Canterbury CB, Herne Bay UD, Whitstable UD, Bridge Blean RD.

Canterbury, the seat of the Primacy of All England and one of the oldest towns in the country, joins with the residential and seaside towns of Herne Bay and Whitstable and the rural district of Bridge Blean to make up the new City of Canterbury.

The City with a continuous history from Roman times was constituted a County Borough in 1888, but its earliest charter extant is one of Henry II. It is the main shopping and educational centre for East Kent.

The seaside resorts of Herne Bay and Whitstable have a continuous coastline of over 14 miles extending from Seasalter in the west to Reculver in the east. Built-up promenades extend for well over half of this distance.

Whitstable is noted for its oyster fisheries which are operated by two companies under charters of considerable antiquity.

The needs of education are well served by a Regional College of Art, a day and evening Technical College, Grammar Schools for boys and girls, 41 Primary Schools and 11 Secondary Schools. A Church of England Teachers Training College and the University of Kent are also established in the district as well as many private schools.

Year round entertainment is produced at the Civic Theatre—The Marlowe—whilst seasonal entertainment is presented by the council at the King's Hall and Central Bandstand at Herne Bay. The new Pier Pavilion sports centre at Herne Bay caters for spectator and other sports to complement the non-spectator sports centre at Canterbury.

The council owns and administers the harbour, pier, swimming baths, car parks, a modern cattle market, a corn market, general markets, caravan parks, foreshore rights and amenities, boating lakes, allotments, burial grounds, recreation grounds and well laid out parks. It also operates a full catering division and tourist information offices. The administrative centre is Canterbury with divisional offices at both Herne Bay and Whitstable.

Mayoral annual allowance: £3,500.

DEFINITION OF AREA

Carlisle CB, Border RD.

The northern boundary of the new City forms the Scottish border for a distance of some 20 miles. To the east lie the North Pennines (an area proposed to be designated as one of outstanding beauty) and the Northumberland National Park; to the west the Solway Firth; and to the south the beautiful Eden Valley and the Lake District National Park. The old City of Carlisle was granted its first charter in 1158 and still contains many historic buildings such as the cathedral, the east window of which is considered to be one of the finest in Europe; the castle, where Mary Queen of Scots was imprisoned; old town hall, guild hall, tithe barn and parts of the city walls. Hadrian's Wall bisects the new city from east to west. Carlisle as a Roman town was the largest settlement on the wall and the Carlisle Museum and Art Gallery at Tullie House includes a major Roman collection. Carlisle is a busy commercial and agricultural centre where some of the largest livestock auction marts in the country are situated. There is a diversity of industry on modern industrial estates immediately adjoining the M6 motorway. Carlisle is an important rail centre and is the Motorail terminal for the Lake District and Southern Scotland. The Council owns its own airport with first class facilities from which scheduled services run to the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands. There is also a flourishing shopping centre and entertainments and cultural facilities are provided for a wide area. A landscaped pedestrianisation scheme has been introduced in the city centre and a new $33\frac{1}{3}$ metre swimming bath has recently been opened. In addition to the city council offices, the headquarters for most of the Cumbria County Council departments are in Carlisle. There is also a Technical College and College of Art and Design.

The Council runs a 9-hole golf course at Stonyholme beside the River Eden in Carlisle and nearby is a miniature golf course at the Swifts. In addition, there are two 18-hole golf courses within the rural area of the city at Aglionby and Brampton. The rural area contains large stretches of unspoiled countryside and the highest point within the city is Cold Fell (2,041 ft.). The main towns and villages in the rural area include Brampton, Longtown, Dalston and Wetheral.

Morpeth MB, Castle Ward RD (part), Morpeth RD.

The centre of administration of the district is Morpeth, which lies in the Wansbeck Valley surrounded by wooded slopes, whilst the river provides a focal point and is a setting for many of the town's most attractive features. Originally the A1 trunk road ran through the centre, but it is now bypassed by this road to the west of the town.

The Northumberland moors and the Cheviot Hills are less than an hour's run away, whilst nearer at hand, within the rural areas of the district, are delightful places for picnics, fishing, sight-seeing or walking. Morpeth is, therefore, an excellent centre and there is a good bus and train service to and from the town.

Surrounding Morpeth are found areas of moorland, magnificent beaches, wooded valleys and unspoilt villages.

Norman inspired remains can be seen at Newminster Abbey, the Chantry and the Castle in Morpeth. The area was once a centre of fierce border warfare and remains of many fortified manors and pele towers bear witness to this.

The coast line within the district commences at Lynemouth and there is an excellent caravan site, owned by the council, at Cresswell on the eastern edge of Druridge Bay. The area stretches from there southwestwards to the beautiful Tyne valley and the Roman Wall.

The Newcastle airport is situated at the southern end of the district within the village of Ponteland which lies 8 miles north-west of Newcastle upon Tyne and 12 miles south of Morpeth.

Playing fields, recreation grounds and parks have been extensively provided and in addition there are golf clubs at Morpeth and Ponteland.

There is extensive private development at Ponteland and in and around Morpeth.

Mayoral annual allowance: £2,500.

Audit by District Auditor (No. 4 Audit District).

DEFINITION OF AREA

The district comprises the areas of the Cheltenham MB and Charlton Kings UD which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974.

Cheltenham is an all-the-year-round Health and Holiday Resort in the heart of the Cotswolds; easily accessible from all parts by road, rail and air—London 98 miles, Oxford, Birmingham and Bristol 42–46 miles. Easy access to M5. The town lies on a gentle slope at the base of the Cotswold Hills, and is protected from north and east winds by these hills. To the south and west stretches an open plain with the River Severn six miles and the source of the Thames four miles away. This position gives Cheltenham a mild but bright and sunny climate, peculiarly free from fogs and extremes of heat and cold. Cheltenham has many fine Regency houses and terraces. The very fine Pittville Pump Room has been completely restored.

It is both a residential and a holiday resort, providing all-the-year-round attractions, including symphony concerts and recitals by world-famous orchestras and artistes and dances on three or four occasions weekly. The Cheltenham Festival of British Contemporary Music (first two weeks in July) and the Cheltenham Festival of Literature (September or October or November) are now well established international annual festivals. In addition the following events take place each year: the Open Competitive Music Festival (May); West of England Ladies' Kennel Club Show (April); East Gloucestershire Tennis Tournament (July); County Cricket Festival (August); Cheltenham Race Meetings (January, April, March, November and December). Cheltenham has also formed associations with the town of Annecy, France; City of Gottingen, Germany; the Soviet town of Sochi and Cheltenham, Pennsylvania, USA.

The Council owns approximately 200 acres of open space at Leckhampton Hill adjoining the borough and is joint owner with the Gloucester City Council of the Staverton Airport.

The Council has made provision for industries which are suitable to the character and situation of the town and there has been a very extensive development of light industry in and around the town (with the employment of large numbers of highly skilled workers) without in any way detracting from the other amenities for which Cheltenham is well known.

Cheltenham is a well-known educational and cultural centre with colleges and public schools, including two teachers' training colleges.

DEFINITION OF AREA

Banbury MB; Bicester UDC; Banbury RDC; Ploughley RDC.

Situated in north-east Oxfordshire the district is predominantly rural in character but approximately half the population is located in the urban areas of Banbury, Bicester, and Kidlington which lie in the north, east and south of the district respectively.

Banbury is an expanding town under the Town Development Act, 1952, with a planned expansion programme which will achieve a population of 40,000 by 1981, and 2,000 houses are being provided under an overspill agreement with the Greater London Council. The town is increasing in importance as a centre for industry, commerce and tourism.

Bicester, an old market town, situated on the A41 trunk road, is rapidly expanding and now has a population of almost 14,700. Considerable industrial development has occurred and more is expected to follow.

Kidlington Parish lies just north of the City of Oxford, and, excluding Bicester, is the most populous of the 76 parishes in the new district, most of the residential development having occurred since the 1939–45 War. Oxford Airport straddles the north-western boundary of the parish.

The whole area has many historical connections and comprises some of the most picturesque scenery in Oxfordshire.

DEFINITION OF AREA

The district comprises the areas of the following local authorities which ceased to exist on 1st April 1974:
Chesterfield MB, Staveley UD, Chesterfield RD (parish of Brimington).

Chesterfield is an ancient borough situated on an eminence in the valley of the River Rother along which has always run one of the country's main arteries of communication. It is the chief town in the North East Derbyshire hundred of Scarsdale.

The Roman road from the south bears a pre-Roman name 'Rykneld Street' and the element 'Chester' implies Roman occupation. In the Middle Ages it was a substantial market town granted Charters by successive monarchs between 1200 and 1600.

As early as 1700 was foreshadowed the Industrial Revolution in the shape of coal mining and iron smelting. From that time the medieval features have been successively overlain by the progress of industrialization which has also influenced the growth of Staveley. The Chesterfield Canal to the Trent was opened in 1777 and the Midland Railway in 1840. George Stephenson, the railway pioneer, lived at Tapton House from 1838 to 1848.

By 1900, Chesterfield was an important railway centre with three railway stations in the centre: the Midland, the Great Central and the Lancashire, Derbyshire and East Coast terminals. Until very recently the main road from Derby and Nottingham to Sheffield passed through the town. Some of the traffic now uses the M1 which runs through Staveley. Although industrialization has influenced the district, particularly to the east, there still remain traces of medieval history in the centre. To the west lies, within five miles, the boundary of the Peak District National Park, the proximity of which, together with its accessibility by road and rail, justifies Chesterfield's claim to be a 'Gateway to the Peak.

DEFINITION OF AREA

Chichester MB, Chichester RD (part), Midhurst RD, Petworth RD.

The district is mainly agricultural and residential and stretches from the Hampshire border to the upper Arun and from the Surrey border to the sea, an area of over 300 square miles, most of which is designated Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty and Great Landscape Value, with a large number of conservation areas and buildings listed as being of historic or architectural interest. The ten miles of coastline runs from Pagham Harbour (Nature Reserve), round Selsey Bill, along Bracklesham Bay to Chichester Harbour. The City of Chichester (Noviomagus) is the administrative headquarters of the district, and dominates the coastal plain as the historic capital and county town of West Sussex, backed by the South Downs. The Rother Valley forms the northern part of the district, including most of the western end of The Weald, with local centres at the small country towns of Midhurst and Petworth. Notable amenities for residents and tourists are Chichester harbour (sailing); the Cathedral and the City generally; the Roman Palace at Fishbourne and the Villa at Bignor; Cowdray Ruins at Midhurst; the stately homes at Petworth, Goodwood and Uppark; racing at Goodwood and Fontwell; polo at Cowdray Park; golf at Goodwood, Cowdray Park, Selsey and Liphook Common; private flying from Goodwood Airfield; and Chichester Festival Theatre.
